"(e) INSUFFICIENT ASSETS.—If at any time liabilities of the Fund exceed assets of the Fund as a result of members of the Ready Reserve being ordered to active duty as described in section 12521(2) of this title, and funds are unavailable to pay benefits completely, the Secretary shall request the President to submit to Congress a request for a special appropriation to cover the unfunded liability. If appropriations are not made to cover an unfunded liability in any fiscal year, the Secretary shall reduce the amount of the benefits paid under the insurance program to a total amount that does not exceed the assets of the Fund expected to accrue by the end of such fiscal year. Benefits that cannot be paid because of such a reduction shall be deferred and may be paid only after and to the extent that additional funds become available.

If no such designation has been made, the amount shall be payable in accordance with the laws of the State of the member's domicile.

(1) The Ia Drang Valley (Pleiku) campaign, carried out by the Armed Forces in the Ia Drang Valley of Vietnam from October 23, 1965, to November 26, 1965, is illustrative of the many battles during the Vietnam conflict which pitted forces of the United States against North Vietnamese Army regulars and Viet Cong in vicious fighting.

(2) Accounts of those battles that have been published since the end of that conflict authoritatively document numerous and repeated acts of extraordinary heroism, sacrifice, and bravery on the part of members of the Armed Forces, many of which have never been officially recognized.

(3) In some of those battles, United States military units suffered substantial losses, with some units sustaining casualties in excess of 50 percent.

(4) The incidence of heavy casualties throughout the Vietnam conflict inhibited the timely collection of comprehensive and detailed information to support recommendations for awards recognizing acts of heroism, sacrifice, and bravery.

(5) Subsequent requests to the Secretaries of the military departments for review of award recommendations for such acts have been denied because of restrictions in law and regulations that require timely filing of such recommendations and documented justification.

(6) Acts of heroism, sacrifice, and bravery performed in combat by members of the Armed Forces deserve appropriate and timely recognition by the people of the United States.

(7) It is appropriate to recognize acts of heroism, sacrifice, or bravery that are belatedly, but properly, documented by persons who witnessed those acts.

(b) Waiver of Time Limitations for Recommendations for Awards.—(1) Any decoration covered by paragraph (2) may be awarded, without regard to any time limit imposed by law or regulation for a recommendation for such award to any person for actions by that person in the Southeast Asia theater of operations while serving on active duty during the Vietnam era. The waiver of time limitations under this paragraph applies only in the case of awards for acts of valor for which a request for consideration is submitted under subsection (c).

(2) Paragraph (1) applies to any decoration (including any device in lieu of a decoration) that, during or after the Vietnam era and before the date of the enactment of this Act, was authorized by law or under regulations of the Department of Defense or the military department concerned to be awarded to members of the Armed Forces for acts of valor.

(b) Sense of Congress.—In light of the findings specified in subsection (a), it is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the Secretary of Defense should develop a program to ensure that such covered beneficiaries who reside in a region in which the TRICARE program has been implemented continue to have adequate access to health care services after the implementation of the TRICARE program; and

(2) as a means of ensuring such access, the budget for fiscal year 1997 submitted by the President under section 1105 of title 31, United States Code, should provide for reimbursement by the Health Care Financing Administration to the Department of Defense for health care services provided to such covered beneficiaries in medical treatment facilities of the Department of Defense.

"(B) the provision of humanitarian assistance, disaster relief, or support for law enforcement (including immigration control) for which funds have not been specifically provided in advance.

"(2) This section applies to—

"(A) any operation the incremental cost of which is expected to exceed $50,000,000; and

"(B) any other operation the expected incremental cost of which, when added to the expected incremental costs of other operations that are currently ongoing, is expected to result in a cumulative incremental cost of ongoing operations of the Department of Defense in excess of $100,000,000.

Any operation the incremental cost of which is expected not to exceed $10,000,000 shall be disregarded for the purposes of subparagraph (B).

"(3) Whenever an operation to which this section applies is commenced or subsequently becomes covered by this section, the Secretary of Defense shall designate and identify that operation for the purposes of this section and shall promptly notify Congress of that designation (and of the identification of the operation).

"(4) This section does not provide authority for the President or the Secretary of Defense to carry out any operation, but establishes mechanisms for the Department of Defense by which funds are provided for operations that the armed forces are required to carry out under some other authority.

"(b) WAIVER OF REQUIREMENT TO REIMBURSE SUPPORT UNITS.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall direct that, when a unit of the armed forces participating in an operation described in subsection (a) receives services from an element of the Department of Defense that operates through the Defense Business Operations Fund (or a successor fund), such unit of the armed forces may not be required to reimburse that element for the incremental costs incurred by that element in providing such services, notwithstanding any other provision of law or any Government accounting practice.

"(2) The amounts which but for paragraph (1) would be required to be reimbursed to an element of the Department of Defense (or a fund) shall be recorded as an expense attributable to the operation and shall be accounted for separately.

"(c) TRANSFER AUTHORITY.—(1) Whenever there is an operation of the Department of Defense described in subsection (a), the Secretary of Defense may transfer amounts described in paragraph (3) to accounts from which incremental expenses for that operation were incurred in order to reimburse those accounts for those incremental expenses. Amounts so transferred shall be merged with and be available for the same purposes as the accounts to which transferred.

"(2) The total amount that the Secretary of Defense may transfer under the authority of this section in any fiscal year is $200,000,000.

"(3) Transfers under this subsection may only be made from amounts appropriated to the Department of Defense for any fiscal year that remain available for obligation, other than amounts within any operation and maintenance appropriation that are available for (A) an account (known as a budget activity 1 account) that is specified as being for operating forces, or (B) an account (known as a budget activity 2 account) that is specified as being for mobilization.

"(4) The authority provided by this subsection is in addition to any other authority provided by law authorizing the transfer of amounts available to the Department of Defense. However, the Secretary may not use any such authority under another provision of law for a purpose described in paragraph (1) if there is authority available under this subsection for that purpose.

"(5) The authority provided by this subsection to transfer amounts may not be used to provide authority for an activity that has been denied authorization by Congress.

"(6) A transfer made from one account to another under the authority of this subsection shall be deemed to increase the amount authorized for the account to which the amount is transferred by an amount equal to the amount transferred.

"(d) REPORT UPON DESIGNATION OF AN OPERATION.—Within 45 days after the Secretary of Defense identifies an operation pursuant to subsection (a)(2), the Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a report that sets forth the following:

"(1) The manner by which the Secretary proposes to obtain funds for the cost to the United States of the operation, including a specific discussion of how the Secretary proposes to restore balances in—

"(A) the Defense Business Operations Fund (or a successor fund), or

"(B) the accounts from which the Secretary transfers funds under the authority of subsection (c), to the levels that would have been anticipated but for the provisions of subsection (c).

"(2) If the operation is described in subsection (a)(1)(B), a justification why the budgetary resources of another department or agency of the Federal Government, instead of resources of the Department of Defense, are not being used for carrying out the operation.

"(3) The objectives of the operation.

"(4) The estimated duration of the operation and of any deployment of armed forces personnel in such operation.

"(5) The estimated incremental cost of the operation to the United States.

"(6) The exit criteria for the operation and for the withdrawal of the elements of the armed forces involved in the operation.

"(e) LIMITATIONS.—(1) The Secretary may not restore balances in the Defense Business Operations Fund through increases in rates charged by that fund in order to compensate for costs incurred and not reimbursed due to subsection (b).

"(2) The Secretary may not restore balances in the Defense Business Operations Fund or any other fund or account through the use of unobligated amounts in an operation and maintenance appropriation that are available within that appropriation for (A) an account (known as a budget activity 1 account) that is specified as being for operating forces, or (B) an account (known as a budget activity 2 account) that is specified as being for mobilization.

"(f) SUBMISSION OF REQUESTS FOR SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS.—(1) Whenever there is an operation described in subsection (a), the President shall submit to Congress a request for the enactment of supplemental appropriations for the then-current fiscal year in order to provide funds to replenish the Defense Business Operations Fund or any other fund or account of the Department of Defense from which funds for the incremental expenses of that operation were derived under this section.

"(2) A request under paragraph (1) shall be submitted not later than 45 days after the date on which notification is provided pursuant to subsection (a)(3). The request shall be submitted as a separate request from any other legislative proposal.

"(g) REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO ADDITIONAL SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS.—If, after a supplemental appropriation has been requested for an operation under subsection (f) and has been provided by law, enactment of an additional supplemental appropriation becomes necessary for the operation before the withdrawal of all armed forces personnel from the operation, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a revised report described in subsection (d) and the President shall submit to Congress an additional request for enactment of a supplemental appropriation as described in subsection (f). The revised report and the request shall be submitted as soon as it is determined that the additional supplemental appropriation is necessary.

"(h) INCREMENTAL COSTS.—For purposes of this section, incremental costs of the Department of Defense with respect to an operation are the costs of the Department that are directly attributable to the operation (and would not have been incurred but for the operation). Incremental costs do not include the cost of property or services acquired by the Department that are paid for by a source outside the Department or out of funds contributed by such a source.

"(i) RELATIONSHIP TO WAR POWERS RESOLUTION.—This section may not be construed as altering or superseding the War Powers Resolution. This section does not provide authority to conduct any military operation.

SEC. 1013. CONTRACT OPTIONS FOR LMSR VESSELS.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) A requirement for the Department of the Navy to acquire 19 large, medium-speed, roll-on/roll-off (LMSR) vessels was established by the Secretary of Defense in the Mobility Requirements Study conducted after the Persian Gulf War pursuant to section 909 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1991 (Public law 101–510; 104 Stat. 1623) and was revalidated by the Secretary of Defense in the report entitled "Mobility Requirements Study Bottom-Up Review Update", submitted to Congress in April 1995.

(2) The Strategic Sealift Program is a vital element of the national military strategy calling for the Nation to be able to fight and win two nearly simultaneous major regional contingencies.

(3) The Secretary of the Navy has entered into contracts with shipyards covering acquisition of a total of 17 such LMSR vessels, of which five are vessel conversions and 12 are new construction vessels. Under those contracts, the Secretary has placed orders for the acquisition of 11 vessels and has options for the acquisition of six more, all of which would be new construction vessels. The options allow the Secretary to place orders for one vessel to be constructed at each of two shipyards for award before December 31, 1995, December 31, 1996, and December 31, 1997, respectively.

(4) Acquisition of an additional two such LMSR vessels, for a total of 19 vessels (the requirement described in paragraph (1)) would contribute to preservation of the industrial base of United States shipyards capable of building auxiliary and sealift vessels.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that the Secretary of the Navy should plan for, and budget to provide for, the acquisition as soon as possible of a total of 19 large, medium-speed, roll-on/roll-off (LMSR) vessels (the number determined to be required in the Mobility Requirements Study referred to in subsection (a)(1)), rather than only 17 such vessels (the number of vessels under contract as of May 1995).

(c) ADDITIONAL NEW CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT OPTION.—The Secretary of the Navy should negotiate with each of the two shipyards holding new construction contracts referred to in subsection (a)(3) (Department of the Navy contracts numbered N00024–93–C–2203 and N00024–93–C–2205) for an option under each such contract for construction of one additional such LMSR vessel, with such option to be available to the Secretary for exercise during 1995, 1996, or 1997.

(d) REPORT.—The Secretary of the Navy shall submit to the congressional defense committees, by March 31, 1996, a report stating the intentions of the Secretary regarding the acquisition of options for the construction of two additional LMSR vessels as described in subsection (c).

Regulations to carry out this clause shall include provisions for the computation of interest (consistent with section 8334(e)(2) and (3) of title 5, United States Code), if no provisions for such computation otherwise exist.

(I) appropriate transfers of individual and Government contributions are made to the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund; and

(II) the actuarial present value of future benefits under FERS attributable to service made creditable by such election is fully funded.

(E) ALTERNATIVE ELECTION FOR AN INDIVIDUAL THEN PARTICIPATING IN A NAFI RETIREMENT SYSTEM.—

(I) is then currently participating in any retirement system established for employees described in section 2105(c) of title 5, United States Code (in this subparagraph referred to as a "NAFI retirement system"); and

(II) would then otherwise be eligible to make an election under subparagraphs (A) through (C) of this paragraph (determined disregarding the matter in subclause (I) of subparagraph (B) before the first semicolon therein) based on a move from FERS.

(ii) ELECTION.—An individual described in clause (i) may, instead of making an election for which such individual is otherwise eligible under this paragraph, elect to have all prior qualifying FERS service of such individual treated as creditable service for purposes of determining eligibility for benefits under a NAFI retirement system, but not for purposes of computing the amount of any such benefits except as provided in clause (v)(II).

(v) FUNDING REQUIREMENTS.—

(I) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subclause (II), nothing in this section or in any other provision of law or any other authority shall be considered to require any payment or transfer of monies in order for an election under this subparagraph to be effective.

(II) CONTRIBUTION REQUIRED ONLY IF INDIVIDUAL ELECTS TO HAVE SERVICE MADE CREDITABLE FOR COMPUTATION PURPOSES AS WELL.—Under regulations prescribed by the appropriate administrative authority, an individual making an election under this subparagraph may further elect to have the qualifying FERS service made creditable for computation purposes under a NAFI retirement system, but only if the individual pays or arranges to pay, at a time and in a manner satisfactory to such administrative authority, the amount necessary to fully fund the actuarial present value of future benefits under the NAFI retirement system attributable to the qualifying FERS service.

(3) INFORMATION.—The regulations under subsection (b) shall include provisions under which any individual—

TITLE XIII—MATTERS RELATING TO OTHER NATIONS

Subtitle A—Peacekeeping Provisions

SEC. 1301. PLACEMENT OF UNITED STATES FORCES UNDER UNITED NATIONS OPERATIONAL OR TACTICAL CONTROL.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

(1) The President has made United Nations peace operations a major component of the foreign and security policies of the United States.

(2) The President has committed United States military personnel under United Nations operational control to missions in Haiti, Croatia, and Macedonia that could endanger those personnel.

(3) The President has committed the United States to deploy as many as 25,000 military personnel to Bosnia-Herzegovina as peacekeepers under NATO operational control in the event that the parties to that conflict reach a peace agreement.

(4) Although the President has insisted that he will retain command of United States forces at all times, in the past this has meant administrative control of United States forces only, while operational control has been ceded to United Nations commanders, some of whom were foreign nationals.

(5) The experience of United States forces participating in combined United States-United Nations operations in Somalia, and in combined United Nations-NATO operations in the former Yugoslavia, demonstrate that prerequisites for effective military operations such as unity of command and clarity of mission have not been met by United Nations command and control arrangements.

(6) Despite the many deficiencies in the conduct of United Nations peace operations, there may be unique occasions when it is in the national security interests of the United States to participate in such operations.

(b) POLICY.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the President should consult closely with Congress regarding any United Nations peace operation that could involve United States combat forces and that such consultations should continue throughout the duration of such activities;

(2) the President should consult with Congress before a vote within the United Nations Security Council on any resolution which would authorize, extend, or revise the mandate for any such activity;

(3) in view of the complexity of United Nations peace operations and the difficulty of achieving unity of command and expeditious decisionmaking, the United States should participate in such operations only when it is clearly in the national security interest to do so;

(4) United States combat forces should be under the operational control of qualified commanders and should have clear and effective command and control arrangements and rules of engagement (which do not restrict their self-defense in any way) and clear and unambiguous mission statements; and

(5) none of the Armed Forces of the United States should be under the operational control of foreign nationals in United Nations peace enforcement operations except in the most extraordinary circumstances.

(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of subsections (a) and (b):

(1) The term "United Nations peace enforcement operations" means any international peace enforcement or similar activity that is authorized by the United Nations Security Council under chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.

(2) The term "United Nations peace operations" means any international peacekeeping, peacemaking, peace enforcement, or similar activity that is authorized by the United Nations Security Council under chapter VI or VII of the Charter of the United Nations.

"(b) EXCEPTION FOR PRESIDENTIAL CERTIFICATION.—(1) Subsection (a) shall not apply in the case of a proposed placement of an element of the armed forces under United Nations operational or tactical control if the President, not less than 15 days before the date on which such United Nations operational or tactical control is to become effective (or as provided in paragraph (2)), meets the requirements of subsection (d).

"(2) If the President certifies to Congress that an emergency exists that precludes the President from meeting the requirements of subsection (d) 15 days before placing an element of the armed forces under United Nations operational or tactical control, the President may place such forces under such operational or tactical control and meet the requirements of subsection (d) in a timely manner, but in no event later than 48 hours after such operational or tactical control becomes effective.

"(c) ADDITIONAL EXCEPTIONS.—(1) Subsection (a) shall not apply in the case of a proposed placement of any element of the Armed Forces under United Nations operational or tactical control if the Congress specifically authorizes by law that particular placement of United States forces under United Nations operational or tactical control.

"(2) Subsection (a) shall not apply in the case of a proposed placement of any element of the armed forces in an operation conducted by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

"(d) PRESIDENTIAL CERTIFICATIONS.—The requirements referred to in subsection (b)(1) are that the President submit to Congress the following:

"(1) Certification by the President that it is in the national security interests of the United States to place any element of the armed forces under United Nations operational or tactical control.

"(2) A report setting forth the following:

"(A) A description of the national security interests that would be advanced by the placement of United States forces under United Nations operation or tactical control.

"(i) to report independently to superior United States military authorities; and

"(ii) to decline to comply with orders judged by the commander to be illegal or beyond the mandate of the mission to which the United States agreed with the United Nations, until such time as that commander receives direction from superior United States military authorities with respect to the orders that the commander has declined to comply with.

"(I) The extent to which the United States will retain the authority to withdraw any element of the Armed Forces from the proposed operation at any time and to take any action it considers necessary to protect those forces if they are engaged.

"(J) The anticipated monthly incremental cost to the United States of participation in the United Nations operation by the United States forces which are proposed to be placed under United Nations operational or tactical control.

"(e) CLASSIFICATION OF REPORT.—A report under subsection (d) shall be submitted in unclassified form and, if necessary, in classified form.

"(f) UNITED NATIONS OPERATIONAL OR TACTICAL CONTROL.—For purposes of this section, an element of the Armed Forces shall be considered to be placed under United Nations operational or tactical control if—

"(1) that element is under the operational or tactical control of an individual acting on behalf of the United Nations for the purpose of international peacekeeping, peacemaking, peace-enforcing, or similar activity that is authorized by the Security Council under chapter VI or VII of the Charter of the United Nations; and

"(2) the senior military commander of the United Nations force or operation is a foreign national or is a citizen of the United States who is not a United States military officer serving on active duty.

"(g) INTERPRETATION.—Nothing in this section may be construed—

"(1) as authority for the President to use any element of the armed forces in any operation; and

"(2) as authority for the President to place any element of the armed forces under the command or operational control of a foreign national.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of subchapter I of such chapter is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"405. Placement of United States forces under United Nations operational or tactical control: limitation.".

(e) EXCEPTION FOR ONGOING OPERATIONS IN MACEDONIA AND CROATIA.—Section 405 of title 10, United States Code, as added by subsection (d), does not apply in the case of activities of the Armed Forces as part of the United Nations force designated as the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) that are carried out—

(3) upon identification by the Secretary of Defense of the dual-use items and technologies referred to in paragraph (2), the President should ensure effective export controls or use unilateral export controls on dual-use items and technologies that are critical to the military capabilities of the Armed Forces (regardless of the availability of such items or technologies overseas) with respect to the countries that—

(A) pose a threat to the national security interests of the United States; and

(B) are not members in good standing of bilateral or multilateral agreements to which the United States is a party on the use of such items and technologies; and

(4) the President, upon recommendation of the Secretary of Defense, should ensure effective controls on the re-export by other countries of dual-use items and technologies that are critical to the military capabilities of the Armed Forces.

(c) ANNUAL REPORT.—(1) Not later than December 1 of each year through 1999, the President shall submit to the committees specified in paragraph (4) a report on the effect of the export control policy of the United States on the national security interests of the United States.

(1) noted that the President had certified that the Krasnoyarsk radar was an unequivocal violation of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty; and

(2) stated it to be the sense of the Congress that the Soviet Union was in violation of its legal obligation under that treaty.

(c) FURTHER REFERENCE TO 1989 CONGRESSIONAL STATEMENTS.—Congress further notes that in section 1006(b) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 1990 and 1991 (Public Law 101–189; 103 Stat. 1543) Congress also—

(1) again noted that in 1987 the President declared that radar to be a clear violation of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty and noted that on October 23, 1989, the Foreign Minister of the Soviet Union conceded that the Krasnoyarsk radar is a violation of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty; and

(2) stated it to be the sense of the Congress that the Soviet Union should dismantle the Krasnoyarsk radar expeditiously and without conditions and that until such radar was completely dismantled it would remain a clear violation of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty.

(d) ADDITIONAL FINDINGS.—Congress also finds, with respect to the Krasnoyarsk radar, that retired Soviet General Y.V. Votintsev, Director of the Soviet National Air Defense Forces from 1967 to 1985, has publicly stated—

(1) that he was directed by the Chief of the Soviet General staff to locate the large phased-array radar at Krasnoyarsk despite the recognition by Soviet authorities that the location of such a radar at that location would be a clear violation of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty; and

(2) that Marshal D.F. Ustinov, Soviet Minister of Defense, threatened to relieve from duty any Soviet officer who continued to object to the construction of a large-phased array radar at Krasnoyarsk.

(e) SENSE OF CONGRESS CONCERNING SOVIET TREATY VIOLATIONS.—It is the sense of Congress that the government of the Soviet Union intentionally violated its legal obligations under the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty in order to advance its national security interests.

(f) SENSE OF CONGRESS CONCERNING COMPLIANCE BY RUSSIA WITH ARMS CONTROL OBLIGATIONS.—In light of subsections (a) through (e), it is the sense of Congress that the United States should remain vigilant in ensuring compliance by Russia with its arms control obligations and should, when pursuing future arms control agreements with Russia, bear in mind violations of arms control obligations by the Soviet Union.

SEC. 1406. SENSE OF CONGRESS ON RATIFICATION OF CHEMICAL WEAPONS CONVENTION AND START II TREATY.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Proliferation of chemical or nuclear weapons materials poses a danger to United States national security, and the threat or use of such materials by terrorists would directly threaten United States citizens at home and abroad.

(2) Events such as the March 1995 terrorist release of a chemical nerve agent in the Tokyo subway, the threatened use of chemical weapons during the 1991 Persian Gulf War, and the widespread use of chemical weapons during the Iran-Iraq War of the 1980's are all potent reminders of the menace posed by chemical weapons, of the fact that the threat of chemical weapons is not sufficiently addressed, and of the need to outlaw the development, production, and possession of chemical weapons.

(3) The Chemical Weapons Convention negotiated and signed by President Bush would make it more difficult for would-be proliferators, including terrorists, to acquire or use chemical weapons, if ratified and fully implemented, as signed, by all signatories.

(4) United States military authorities, including Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff General John Shalikashvili, have stated that United States military forces will deter and respond to chemical weapons threats with a robust chemical defense and an overwhelming superior conventional response, as demonstrated in the Persian Gulf War, and have testified in support of the ratification of the Chemical Weapons Convention.

(5) The United States intelligence community has testified that the Convention will provide new and important sources of information, through regular data exchanges and routine and challenge inspections, to improve the ability of the United States to assess the chemical weapons status in countries of concern.

(6) The Convention has not entered into force for lack of the requisite number of ratifications.

(7) Russia has signed the Convention, but has not yet ratified it.

(8) There have been reports by Russian sources of continued Russian production and testing of chemical weapons, including a statement by a spokesman of the Russian Ministry of Defense on December 5, 1994, that "We cannot say that all chemical weapons production and testing has stopped altogether.".

(9) The Convention will impose a legally binding obligation on Russia and other nations that possess chemical weapons and that ratify the Convention to cease offensive chemical weapons activities and to destroy their chemical weapons stockpiles and production facilities.

(10) The United States must be prepared to exercise fully its rights under the Convention, including the request of challenge inspections when warranted, and to exercise leadership in pursuing punitive measures against violators of the Convention, when warranted.

(11) The United States should strongly encourage full implementation at the earliest possible date of the terms and conditions of the United States-Russia bilateral chemical weapons destruction agreement signed in 1990.

(12) The START II Treaty negotiated and signed by President Bush would help reduce the danger of potential proliferators, including terrorists, acquiring nuclear warheads and materials, and would contribute to United States-Russian bilateral efforts to secure and dismantle nuclear warheads, if ratified and fully implemented as signed by both parties.

(13) It is in the national security interest of the United States to take effective steps to make it more difficult for proliferators or would-be terrorists to obtain chemical or nuclear materials for use in weapons.

(14) The President has urged prompt Senate action on, and advice and consent to ratification of, the START II Treaty and the Chemical Weapons Convention.

(15) The Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff has testified to Congress that ratification and full implementation of both treaties by all parties is in the United States national interest and has strongly urged prompt Senate advice and consent to their ratification.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that the United States, Russia, and all other parties to the START II Treaty and the Chemical Weapons Convention should promptly ratify and fully implement, as negotiated, both treaties.

The head of such agency may redelegate such authority only to a Chief Information Officer designated pursuant to section 3506 of title 44, United States Code. Notice of each such waiver and delegation shall be transmitted promptly to Congress and shall be published promptly in the Federal Register.

(b) SOLUTIONS-BASED CONTRACTING DESCRIBED.—For purposes of this section, solutions-based contracting is an acquisition method under which the acquisition objectives are defined by the Federal Government user of the technology to be acquired, a streamlined contractor selection process is used, and industry sources are allowed to provide solutions that attain the objectives effectively.

(c) PROCESS REQUIREMENTS.—The Administrator shall require use of a process with the following aspects for acquisitions under the pilot program:

(1) ACQUISITION PLAN EMPHASIZING DESIRED RESULT.—Preparation of an acquisition plan that defines the functional requirements of the intended users of the information technology to be acquired, identifies the operational improvements to be achieved, and defines the performance measurements to be applied in determining whether the information technology acquired satisfies the defined requirements and attains the identified results.

(2) RESULTS-ORIENTED STATEMENT OF WORK.—Use of a statement of work that is limited to an expression of the end results or performance capabilities desired under the acquisition plan.

(3) SMALL ACQUISITION ORGANIZATION.—Assembly of a small acquisition organization consisting of the following:

(7) SIMPLE PROPOSALS.—Submission of oral presentations and written proposals that are limited in size and scope and contain information on—

(A) the offeror's qualifications to perform the desired work;

(B) past contract performance;

(C) the proposed conceptual approach; and

(D) the costs likely to be associated with the proposed conceptual approach.

(B) Conduct for 30 to 60 days of a program definition phase (funded, in the case of the source ultimately awarded the contract, by the Federal Government)—

(i) during which the selected source, in consultation with one or more intended users, develops a conceptual system design and technical approach, defines logical phases for the project, and estimates the total cost and the cost for each phase; and

(ii) after which a contract for performance of the work may be awarded to that source on the basis of cost, the responsiveness, reasonableness, and quality of the proposed performance, and a sharing of risk and benefits between the source and the Government.

(C) Conduct of as many successive program definition phases with alternative sources (in the order ranked) as is necessary in order to award a contract in accordance with subparagraph (B).

(3) COMPLEXITY OF PROJECTS.—(A) Subject to subparagraph (C), each acquisition project under the pilot program shall be sufficiently complex to provide for meaningful evaluation of the use of solutions-based contracting for acquisition of information technology for executive agencies.

(B) In order for an acquisition project to satisfy the requirement in subparagraph (A), the solution for attainment of the executive agency's objectives under the project should not be obvious, but rather shall involve a need for some innovative development and systems integration.

(C) An acquisition project should not be so extensive or lengthy as to result in undue delay in the evaluation of the use of solutions-based contracting.

(e) MONITORING BY GAO.—The Comptroller General of the United States shall—

(1) monitor the conduct, and review the results, of acquisitions under the pilot program; and

(2) submit to Congress periodic reports containing the views of the Comptroller General on the activities, results, and findings under the pilot program.

(iv) The impact of the pilot program on small businesses and socially and economically disadvantaged small businesses.

(4) WITHDRAWAL OF SCHEDULE OR PORTION OF SCHEDULE FROM PILOT PROGRAM.—The Administrator may withdraw a multiple award schedule or portion of a schedule from the pilot program if the Administrator determines that (A) price competition is not available under such schedule or portion thereof, or (B) the cost to the Government for that schedule or portion thereof for the previous year was higher than it would have been if the contracts for such schedule or portion thereof had been awarded using procedures that would apply if the pilot program were not in effect. The Administrator shall notify Congress at least 30 days before the date on which the Administrator withdraws a schedule or portion thereof under this paragraph. The authority under this paragraph may not be delegated.

(5) TERMINATION OF PILOT PROGRAM.—Unless reauthorized by law, the authority of the Administrator to award contracts under the pilot program shall expire four years after the date on which the pilot program is established. JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1530) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1996 for military activities of the Department of Defense, for military construction, and for defense programs of the Department of Energy, to prescribe personnel strengths for such fiscal year for the Armed Forces, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which is a substitute for the House bill and the Senate amendment. The differences between the House bill, the Senate amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

SUMMARY STATEMENT OF CONFERENCE ACTION

The conferees recommend authorizations for the Department of Defense for procurement, research and development, test and evaluation, operation and maintenance, working capital funds, military construction and family housing, weapons programs of the Department of Energy, and civil defense that have a budget authority implication of $264.7 billion.

SUMMARY TABLE OF AUTHORIZATIONS

The defense authorization act provides authorizations for appropriations but does not generally provide budget authority. Budget authority is generally provided in appropriation acts.

In order to relate the conference recommendations to the Budget Resolution, matters in addition to the dollar authorizations contained in this bill must be taken into account. A number of programs in the defense function are authorized permanently or, in certain instances, authorized in other annual legislation. In addition, this authorization bill would establish personnel levels and include a number of legislative provisions affecting military compensation.

The following table summarizes authorizations included in the bill in fiscal year 1996 and, in addition, summarizes the national defense (budget function 050).

High mobility multipurpose wheeled vehicle

The budget request included $57.7 million for 546 high mobility multipurpose wheeled vehicles (HMMWVs).

The House bill would authorize an increase of $39.0 million to procure approximately 700 additional HMMWVs.

The Senate amendment would authorize an increase of $72.0 million to procure approximately 1300 additional HMMWVs.

The House recedes.

The conferees agree that additional HMMWVs are required for both the Army and the Marine Corps, and expect the military services to include in future budget requests adequate funds to procure sufficient HMMWVs to meet validated service requirements and to meet minimum annual required production rates necessary to sustain the essential elements of the HMMWV industrial base.

Family of heavy tactical vehicles

The budget request included $0.6 million for the family of heavy tactical vehicles (FHTV).

The House bill would authorize an increase of $100.0 million for the FHTV program.

The Senate amendment would authorize an increase of $125.0 million for the FHTV program.

The House recedes.

The conferees agree to authorize an increase to the budget request of $125.0 million to procure the heavy tactical vehicles, as indicated below:

	Dollars (in millions)	Quantity
Heavy equipment transporter	$40.0	83
Heavy expanded mobility tactical transporter	33.0	115
Palletized loading system	52.0	147

Medium truck extended service program

The budget request did not include funds for the medium truck extended service program (ESP).

The House bill would not authorize funds for medium truck ESP.

The Senate amendment would authorize $30.0 million for medium truck ESP.

The conferees agree to authorize $20.0 million for medium truck ESP. The conferees express their concern regarding the possibility of initiating multiple truck remanufacture programs, thereby creating excess capacity in the industry. The conferees prefer that maximum use be made of the medium truck ESP currently underway, that separate, additional procurements be kept to a minimum to avoid industrial overcapacity, and that, for future procurements, consideration be given to reliable manufacturers with demonstrated capabilities to produce military trucks.

GUARDRAIL tactical information broadcast service

The budget request included $48.9 million for the GUARDRAIL common sensor program.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment would authorize funding at the requested level.

The conferees have determined that there is a need for GUARDRAIL aircraft to be equipped with improved intelligence data dissemination capability and interoperability with other intelligence data producers. Therefore, the conferees agree to authorize an increase of $9.0 million to the budget request for procurement and integration of tactical information broadcast service to provide this capability for existing GUARDRAIL aircraft.

Nonsystem training devices

The budget request included $71.6 million for nonsystem training devices.

The House bill and the Senate amendment authorized the request.

The conferees are concerned that the Army is currently training firefighters using fossil-fueled techniques that are not only hazardous to the trainees but, in some cases, in violation of environmental regulations. Moreover, the conferees are aware that there are computer-controlled natural gas/propane firefighter training systems, currently used by other services, that provide safe training for individuals and minimize destruction to the environment. Accordingly, the conferees authorize $4.5 million to procure an initial set of these systems.

Further, the conferees believe that the Army should develop a plan to replace current firefighting training sites in regions where multiple commands can take advantage of a single site.

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1996 contained an authorization of $3,886.5 million for Aircraft Procurement, Navy in the Department of Defense. The House bill would authorize $4,106.5 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $4,916.6 million. The conferees recommended an authorization of $4,572.4 million. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

AV-8B remanufacture

The budget request included $148.2 million for the remanufacture of four Marine Corps AV-8B aircraft.

The House bill would add $160.0 million for the remanufacture of eight additional aircraft.

The Senate amendment would authorize an additional $100.0 million for the remanufacture of four more aircraft.

The conferees agree to authorize a total of $229.4 million, $81.3 million above the budget request, for the remanufacture of four additional aircraft.

Electronic warfare

The budget request included no funds to either expand the Navy's fleet of EA-6B block 89 aircraft to accommodate the retirement of the EF-111 jammer aircraft or to improve the capabilities of the existing Block 89 EA-6B fleet.

The House bill would approve the budget request.

The Senate amendment would authorize $216.0 million to modernize airborne electronic warfare (EW) capabilities of the EA-6B Block 89 aircraft and to expand the number of Block 89 aircraft by 20.

The conferees agree that modernization of the Department's tactical electronic warfare aircraft fleet is a priority item of special interest. Accordingly, the conferees agree to authorize $165.0 million to initiate procurement of EA-6B modifications, as set forth below:

(1) $100.0 million to modernize up to 20 older EA-6B Block 82 aircraft to the newer Block 89 configuration to offset EF-111 retirements;

(2) $40.0 million to procure 60 band 9/10 transmitters; and

(3) $25.0 million for 30 USQ-113 enhanced radio countermeasure sets.

The conferees also authorize an increase of $10.0 million to Navy EW development (PE 64270N), to develop a low-cost, reactive jamming capability for the EA-6B. The conferees are especially interested in the Navy's completion of an affordable upgrade to the EA-6B reactive processor capability.

The conferees note the inconsistent nature of the Navy's actions regarding airborne tactical EW in recent years and are deeply concerned with the Navy's vacillating commitment and support for meaningful upgrades to the EA-6B aircraft. Accordingly, the Secretary of the Navy is directed to:

(1) initiate the EA-6B modifications identified above.

(2) provide the congressional defense committees with the following:

(a) a program and budget plan for completing the directed modifications.

(b) the Joint Tactical Airborne EW Study (JTAEWS).

In addition, the conferees agree that the Secretary of the Navy shall not obligate more than 75 percent of funds appropriated for procurement of the F/A-18C/D for fiscal year 1996 until he has accomplished the actions specified above.

F-14 modifications

The budget request included $59.0 million for F-14 modifications. This amount did not include any funds for a forward-looking infrared (FLIR)/laser designator system for the F-14. The budget request included $25.4 million in research and development funds for a precision strike upgrade, an effort to integrate the joint direct attack munition (JDAM) into the F-14.

The House bill would approve the budget request for F-14 modifications.

After completion of the House bill, the Navy informed the Senate that the requirements validation process had documented an operational requirement for a FLIR/laser designator system for the F-14, in lieu of the JDAM integration. The Senate considered this requirement to be a high priority for carrier operations. Therefore, the Senate amendment would authorize an increase of $17.1 million for F-14 aircraft modifications in fiscal year 1996. This action was taken with the understanding that the Department of Defense would provide funding for the system in future budget requests.

The conferees agree to provide $101.5 million for F-14 modifications, with an increase of $42.5 million provided for the FLIR/laser designator effort. The conferees also agree to reduce the F-14 research and development request by $25.4 million.

Additionally, the conferees agree to invite the Navy to reprogram funds originally authorized for JDAM integration into the FLIR/laser designator procurement effort, to expedite meeting the need for improving F-14 strike capability.

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1996 contained an authorization of $1,787.1 million for Weapons Procurement, Navy in the Department of Defense. The House bill would authorize $1,626.4 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $1,771.4 million. The conferees recommended an authorization of $1,659.8 million. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

Submarine navigation sets

The budget request included $4.1 million for the electrically suspended gyro navigator (ESGN), the navigation system currently installed on Navy submarines. It also included $17.7 million for other navigation equipment.

The House bill would reduce ESGN funding by $4.1 million and increase funding for other navigation equipment by $10.0 million to purchase and install MK-49 ring laser gyro (RLG) navigators on Navy submarines.

The Senate amendment would reduce ESGN funding by $2.5 million, the amount budgeted for ESGN reliability modifications. It would also increase funding for other navigation equipment by $10.0 million to purchase and install MK-49 RLG navigators on Navy submarines.

The Senate recedes.

AN/BPS-16 submarine radar

The budget request included $0.5 million for ship radar support .

The House bill would add $9.0 million for procurement of AN/BPS-16 submarine radar systems because of a concern about the reliability and operational suitability of the existing AN/BPS-15 submarine navigation radar.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The conferees are aware that there is a commercial off-the-shelf (COTS) variant of the AN/BPS-16 that could be procured and installed at a substantially lower cost than the AN/BPS-16 built to military specifications. The conferees are also aware that the reliability and maintenance challenges associated with the existing AN/BPS-15 have induced many Navy submarine crews to procure inexpensive commercial navigation radars with limited capability.

Based on these considerations, the conferees agree to authorize an increase of $9.0 million for the procurement and installation of AN/BPS-16 submarine radar sets. The conferees encourage the Navy to take advantage of the new COTS variant of the AN/BPS-16 to achieve the maximum benefit from this additional funding.

Afloat planning system

The conferees have fully supported the Tomahawk cruise missile program and the associated support systems necessary for employment of Tomahawk for precision strike missions. The conferees note that the Tomahawk afloat planning system (APS) complements the Tomahawk mission planning system, located at the shore-based mission planning centers, and provides afloat battle group and battle force commanders or deployed joint staffs with an organic capability to plan for the tactical employment of the conventional Tomahawk land attack missile (TLAM). APS is also an integral part of the Joint Service Imagery Processing System—Navy (JSIPS-N) and Challenge Athena systems. These systems support Tomahawk strike planning, but can also provide mission planning support for other precision guided munitions.

The conferees encourage the Department of Defense to:

(1) continue support and funding for APS; and

(2) consider extending APS's targeting and mission planning capabilities to other tactical command echelons, in order to meet the expanding requirement for tactical utilization of the Tomahawk system and improve its responsiveness to the demands of land battle.

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1996 contained an authorization of $474.1 million for Marine Corps Procurement, Navy in the Department of Defense. The House bill would authorize $399.2 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $683.4 million. The conferees recommended an authorization of $458.9 million. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

Commander's Tactical Terminal

The budget request included no funding for USMC procurement of Commander's Tactical Terminal (CTT) radios.

Neither the House bill nor the Senate amendment authorized additional funding for CTT radios.

The conferees note that the Department's integrated (intelligence) broadcast service plan included migration to an interoperable family of transceivers known as the Joint Tactical Terminal. The conferees have been informed that Marine Corps procurement of CTTs will play a vital role in this plan, and therefore authorize an increase of $12.5 million for this purpose.

Marine Corps intelligence support equipment

The budget request did not include funds for Marine Corps procurement of Joint Surveillance and Target Attack Radar System (JSTARS) ground support module.

Neither the House bill nor the Senate amendment included additional funds for this purpose.

The conferees believe the Marine Corps should have more responsibility over its own procurement actions, and therefore agree to authorize an increase of $16.5 million for Marine procurement of two JSTARS ground support modules.

Light reconnaissance/strike vehicles

The budget request did not include funds for procurement of any light reconnaissance/strike vehicles (LRV/LSV).

The House bill would add $2.0 million to buy LRVs for the Marine Corps and $6.0 million to buy LSVs for the special operations forces.

The conferees agree to authorize $6.0 million for LSVs for the special operations forces.

The conferees understand that the Marine Corps has completed a mission needs statement (MNS) for an LRV. The MNS calls for fielding an LRV with the Fleet Marine Forces by fiscal year 1995. However, the Marine Corps has neither established a formal requirement nor budgeted any resources against a possible requirement.

Therefore, the conferees direct the Secretary of the Navy to report to the congressional defense committees on whether the Marine Corps will translate the MNS into an operational requirement and the risks the Fleet Marine Force will incur if an LRV is not procured. The conferees expect the Secretary to submit this report by February 28, 1996.

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1996 contained an authorization of $6,183.9 million for Aircraft Procurement, Air Force in the Department of Defense. The House bill would authorize $7,032.0 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $6,318.6 million. The conferees recommended an authorization of $7,349.8 million. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

Air Force fighter aircraft data link

The budget request included $79.5 million for F–15 modifications.

The House bill would authorize the requested amount based on assurances from the Department of Defense that Air Force efforts to procure a tactical information data link for a portion of the F–15 fleet would be conducted within the scope of the Department's multifunction information distribution system (MIDS) program.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request. The Senate report (S. Rept. 104–112) expressed support for the Air Force's efforts to equip its fighter aircraft with "Link 16" data link capability, but questioned the Air Force's decision to pursue this capability for only a portion of the F–15 fleet. The Senate report also recommended that the Department continue MIDS acquisition and stated that it would not support any Air Force effort to start a new program, redundant to MIDS, to meet similar requirements.

The conferees note that the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology has terminated the F–15 data link procurement and that the Air Force now intends to pursue a MIDS variant data link to meet its requirements. The Department has informed the conferees that this program is to be a competitive solicitations that will require adherence to the MIDS architecture, MIDS software modularity, MIDS hardware modulatory as a design objective, and, for the F–15, reduced hardware and software functionality to reduce costs.

The conferees agree to authorize $78.3 million for F–15 modifications. The conferees direct the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology to ensure that the Department for Acquisition and Technology to ensure that the Department uses a competitive acquisition strategy for fighter data link procurement. The strategy should promote full opportunity for U.S. companies to compete within the competitive solicitation outlined by the Under Secretary.

Defense support program procurement

The budget request included $102.9 million for Defense Support Program (DSP) procurement.

The Senate amendment would authorize $67.0 million, a reduction of $35.9 million to the budget request.

The House bill would authorize the budget request.

The House recedes. The conferees are aware that $35.9 million in fiscal year 1995 funds are excess and subject to consideration for reprogramming for non-DSP purposes. Therefore, the conferees agree to reduce the fiscal year 1996 DSP procurement budget by $35.9 million, leaving $67.0 million. The conferees direct the Air Force to use the excess fiscal year 1995 omnibus reprogramming request to fulfill fiscal year 1996 DSP requirements. Given that the fiscal year 1995 DSP procurement source has been denied as part of this year's omnibus reprogramming, the conferees direct that the full amount be restored to DSP.

RC–135 re-engining

The budget request included no funding for the Defense Airborne Reconnaissance Program (DARP) modifications line (P–1), line 57) in the Aircraft Procurement Air Force account.

The House bill would authorize an increase of $37.0 million for modification of an existing C–135 aircraft to the RC–135 RIVET JOINT configuration.

The Senate amendment would authorize an increase of $48.0 million for re-engining of two existing RIVET JOINT aircraft. The Senate amendment would also authorize an increase of $31.5 million in PE 64268F for nonrecurring integration activity to facilitate an affordable program for converting two retired EC–135 aircraft to the RIVET JOINT configuration.

ENGINES AND INSTALLATION

The conferees concur with the cost effectiveness and increase in operational effectiveness that could be provided by re-engining the existing fleet of RIVET JOINT aircraft and agree to authorize an increase of $48.0 million to procure and install re-engining kits for two existing RIVET JOINT aircraft.

The conferees note that the theater Commanders-in-Chief (CINCs) have addressed additional RIVET JOINT aircraft as one of their highest intelligence priorities. The need for additional RIVET JOINT aircraft is further reinforced by the extremely high operational tempo currently experienced by this reconnaissance asset. The conferees support the theater CINCs' requirements for additional RIVET JOINT aircraft and strongly urge the Department to seek reprogramming authority to modify other existing C–135 assets to the RC–135 configuration.

SR–71

The conferees agree to provide an additional $5.0 million for costs associated with the refurbishment of SR–71 aircraft.

ENGINE COMPONENT IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM

The conferees agree to authority $133.2 million for the engine component improvement program, an increase of $29.5 million, consisting of two adjustments: (1) an additional $31.5 million for the integration activity described in the Senate report (S. Rept. 104–112); and (2) a reduction of the $2.0 million requested for the B–2 engine.,

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1996 contained an authorization of $3,647.7 million for Missile Procurement, Air Force in the Department of Defense. The House bill would authorize $3,430.1 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $3,627.5 million. The conferees recommended an authorization of $2,938.9 million. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

Defense airborne reconnaissance program procurement

The budget request included $179.3 million in procurement for the Defense airborne reconnaissance program (DARP).

The House bill would approve the budget request.

The Senate amendment would increase the requested amount by $4.5 million, and would direct the Department to change the priorities of some program elements. The conferees agree to an authorization of $161.6 million, a reduction of $17.7 million from the budget request.

JOINT TACTICAL UAV

The conferees agree to authorize a total of $42.4 million for the joint tactical UAV (JT-UAV), a reduction of $17.7 million from the budget request.

The conferees are particularly concerned about the continuing problems with the Hunter UAV in the JT-UAV program. Therefore, the conferees direct that none of the funds appropriated for fiscal year 1996 be used to procure production Hunter systems or additional low-rate initial production units, beyond those already ordered, until the Secretary of Defense provides to the Congressional defense committees the results of the Defense Acquisition Board (DAB) review of the Hunter program.

PIONEER UAV

Of the funds authorized and appropriated for defense-wide procurement, Defense Airborne Reconnaissance Programs (DARP), the conferees direct that the Department use $4.5 million to equip nine Pioneer UAV systems with the common automatic landing and recovery system (CARLS).

The conferees note the Department's continuing failure to equip UAVs with the CARLS system. The conferees are concerned with this result, particularly since the Department agrees that CARLS installation on UAVs in general, and Pioneer in particular, would reduce landing accidents and associated losses.

Automated document conversion system

The budget request did not include any additional funds for the automated document conversion system (ADCS). This is a program for converting the Department of Defense's engineering drawings from hard copy to electronic format.

The House bill would authorize $20.0 million for this purpose.

The Senate amendment would approve the budget request.

The conferees are concerned with the lack of progress by the Department toward achieving major cost savings through the adoption of automated document conversion technology. The conferees are encouraged, however, that the Department has recently acknowledged such savings and has produced a roadmap to realize these savings by changing from raster to vector conversion. The conferees also understand this plan brings an upgrade and expansion of UNIX-based systems and will test several personal computer (PC)-based systems.

However, the conferees are concerned with the Department's plan for using $10.0 million of these funds for "bulk" conversion purposes, since these funds were specifically appropriated for the purchase of ADCS equipment. the conferees are concerned that there may be a greater requirement for ADCS software and equipment than the Department currently has planned and that some or all of the funds planned for bulk conversion may be needed for software and equipment. Should the results of the Department's ongoing conversion survey confirm that additional software and equipment is needed, the conferees feel that the Department should address first the needs of UNIX-based engineering systems as the UNIX-based system has undergone extensive testing per Congressional direction. The conferees direct that the Secretary of Defense provide a report to the congressional defense committees by march 29, 1996, on the results of the PC-based system testing.

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1996 contained no authorization for National Guard and Reserve Procurement in the Department of Defense. The House bill would authorize $770.0 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $777.4 million. The conferees recommended an authorization of $777.0 million. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1996 contained an authorization of $746.7 million for Chemical Agent and Munitions Destruction, Army in the Department of Defense. The House bill would authorize $746.7 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $671.7 million. The conferees recommended an authorization of $672.3 million. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Aerial targets

The budget request included $68.6 million for aerial targets.

The House bill and the Senate amendment authorized the request.

The conferees understand the Navy's current acquisition strategy for subscale subsonic aerial targets is to procure only the BQM-74E. However, the conferees understand the contractor may have taken some recent cost reduction initiatives on the BQM-34S subscale target. Therefore, the conferees believe that the Navy's non-competitive procurement of the BQM-74E may not provide the service with the best value target. Accordingly, the conferees urge the Navy to reassess its acquisition strategy for this target and conduct a competition based upon meeting a performance specification. The conferees believe that such a competition could result in buying a target that truly represents the best value to the Navy.

AN/ALE-47

The conferees are concerned that the current Air Force acquisition strategy for the follow-on production of lots IV through VII of the AN/ALE-47 Countermeasure Dispenser System may involve significant and unnecessary risks for the program. The conferees direct the Air Force to delay any procurement action regarding lots IV through VIII of the AN/ALE-47 until 14 days after the date on which the Air Force has provided the congressional defense committees with a report that assesses the cost and acquisition strategy related to the introduction of new suppliers for the system.

Engineer construction equipment

The conferees are aware of the significant contribution National Guard engineer construction units have made to securing the southwest border. The construction efforts of the National Guard have been of singular assistance in providing for increased safety for U.S. Border Patrol agents and in facilitating the U.S. Border Patrol efforts to counter illegal drugs and illegal immigration along the southwest border. The conferees agree that sufficient funds should be allocated by the National Guard to purchase appropriate loaders, dozers, and road-grading equipment for use by National Guard engineer construction units that rotate to continue construction on projects along the United States-Mexican border.

The conferees have indicated elsewhere in this statement of managers, that the Department of Defense should, through normal reprogramming procedures, use available funds provided for counterdrug activities to continue construction to extend the fence constructed by the National Guard on the southwest border.

LPD-17 radio communications systems engineering support

The conferees note that, as a result of the base realignment and closure decisions, the Navy has reorganized and consolidated its radio communications systems (RCS) engineering, production, testing, integration, and training support activities. In assigning RCS engineering support workload for the LPD-17 class of ships, the conferees expect that the Navy will assign such workload to the most appropriate facility.

SH-60 modifications

The conferees understand that there are at least 60 AN/AQS-13F dipping sonars currently installed in the Navy's SH-60F helicopters that will not be replaced under the SH-60R program. These sonars could be upgraded to meet current shallow water operational requirements based on a modification already developed through the FMS program.

The conferees direct the Secretary of the Navy to evaluate the cost effectiveness of a modification program for the AQS-13F dipping sonars that will not be replaced in conjunction with the SH-60R program, and report the results to the congressional defense committees by March 15, 1996.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Subtitle A—Authorization of Appropriations

Subtitle B—Army Programs

Procurement of OH-58D Armed Kiowa Warrior helicopters (sec. 111)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 111) that would modify current law to permit procurement of twenty additional OH-58D AHIP scout helicopters.

The Senate amendment contained an identical provision (sec. 122).

The conferees understand that the procurement of twenty additional OH-58D Armed Kiowa Warrior helicopters will cost up to $140.0 million and agree to amend the provision to authorize $140.0 million to procure these helicopters.

Repeal of requirements for armored vehicle upgrades (sec. 112)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 112) that would repeal subsection (j) of section 21 of the Arms Export Control Act (22 U.S.C. 2761).

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Multiyear procurement of helicopters (sec. 113)

The budget request included $354.0 million to buy 18 AH-64D aircraft and 13 Longbow fire control radars.

The House bill would authorize the budget request.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 111) that would authorize an increase of $82.0 million and the multiyear procurement of Longbow Apache helicopters.

The House recedes with an amendment.

The conferees agree to authorize an increase of $76.2 million for the Longbow Apache attack helicopter program and multiyear procurement contracts for both the AH-64D Longbow Apache attack helicopter program and the UH-60 Black Hawk utility helicopter program.

Report on AH-64D engine upgrades (sec. 114)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 114) that would require the Secretary of the Army to submit a report to Congress on plans to procure T700-701C engine upgrade kits for Army AH-64D helicopters.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Requirement for use of previously authorized multiyear procurement authority for Army small arms procurement (sec. 115)

The budget request did not include any funds for procurement of small arms.

The House bill and the Senate amendment would authorize funds for the following small arms programs as indicated below:

[In millions of dollars]

	House	Senate
M–16 rifle	$13.5	$13.5
M4 carbine	6.5	13.5
M9 personal defense weapon	2.0	4.0
M249 squad automatic weapon	28.5	28.5
MK–19 grenade launcher	20.0	33.9
Medium machine gun (mod kits)	6.5	6.5

The conferees agree to provide funds for small arms programs as indicated below:

[Dollars amounts in millions]

		Quantity
M–16 rifle	$13.5	27,500
M4 carbine	6.5	12,000
M9 personal defense weapon	2.0	4,660
M249 squad automatic weapon	28.5	10,265
MK–19 grenade launcher	33.9	2,100
Medium machine gun (mod kits)	6.5	1,434

The conferees express their concern that the Army did not include funds for small arms programs in the fiscal year 1996 budget request, despite specific direction regarding multiyear procurement for small arms included in the Statement of Managers accompanying the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1995 (S. Rept. 103-701). The conferees expect the Secretary of the Army to comply with both the letter and intent of the law in this regard. The conferees further expect the Secretary of the Army to ensure that small arms programs are funded at levels approximating those in this report until requirements for each separate class of small arms are fully achieved and that appropriate multiyear contracts are executed. The conferees include a provision (sec. 116) that would direct the Secretary of the Army to enter into multiyear procurement contracts during fiscal year 1997, in accordance with section 115(b)(2) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1995.

Subtitle C—Navy Programs

Nuclear attack submarines (sec. 131)

The budget request reflected a policy, adopted by the Department of Defense as a consequence of its Bottom Up Review, that would cause all future nuclear submarines to be constructed by General Dynamics Electric Boat Division (Electric Boat). The budget request included the following funding for submarine construction programs:

(1) $1.5 billion for SSN-23, the final increment required for full funding of this Seawolf class submarine;

(2) $704.5 million advance procurement for the first of a new class of nuclear attack submarines, designated as the new attack submarine (NAS), whose construction would begin in fiscal year 1998; and

(3) a total of $455.4 million for research, development, test, and evaluation for the NAS program.

The House report (H. Rept. 104-131) reflected the view that changes in the Navy's plan for acquisition of nuclear attack submarines should be made to incorporate advanced technologies into these submarines' designs. These recommendations were based on an underlying premise that the Navy's NAS program would not provide an adequate technological advantage over foreign submarines presently under construction or in design. The House bill would:

(1) not authorize SSN-23;

(2) authorize $550.0 million for Electric Boat to design, build, and incorporate a hull section into SSN-22 to create a lengthened, expanded capability variant of the basic Seawolf design, while retaining its full weapons load;

(3) authorize $704.5 million advance procurement for the fiscal year 1998 submarine that would be built by Electric Boat;

(4) authorize $300.0 million for Electric Boat to design and build a second hull section that would be incorporated into a fiscal year 1998 submarine, and convert that submarine from the lead ship of a serial-production class, based on the current NAS design, into an additional, one-of-a-kind, expanded capability platform that would be derived from the current NAS design;

(5) directs that $10.0 million of the funds in the budget request for NAS detailed design work be used only for establishing and maintaining a cadre of Newport News submarine designers at Electric Boat and for transfer of all submarine designers at Electric Boat's design data base to Newport News';

(6) authorize $150.0 million to begin an effort at Newport News to design, develop, and build prototype versions of major submarine components that would result in a follow-on submarine design for serial production that represents a substantial improvement in affordability and capability over the current NAS design;

(7) direct the Advanced Research Projects Agency (ARPA) and the national laboratories to make new technologies available to both Electric Boat and Newport News that show potential for achieving a follow-on submarine design for serial production that represents a substantial improvement over the current NAS design; and

(8) include a provision (sec. 133) that would direct the Secretary of the navy to award, on a competitive basis, contracts for attack submarines built after the fiscal year 1998 submarine.

The Senate amendment reflected an alternate view on how to acquire nuclear attack submarines. It contained a provision (sec. 121) that would:

(1) authorize the SSN-23 at $1.5 billion, the budget request;

(2) limit the ability of the Secretary of the Navy to obligate or expend funds for SSN-23 until he restructures the NAS program to provide for:

(a) procurement of the lead NAS from Electric Boat in fiscal year 1998;

(b) procurement of the second NAS from Newport News Shipbuilding and Drydock (Newport News) in fiscal year 1999; and

(c) competitive procurement of any additional NAS vessels after the second. Potential competitors for these additional vessels would be contractors that have been awarded a contract by the Secretary of the Navy for construction of nuclear attack submarines during the past 10 years;

(3) place additional limits on the total amount of funds that may be expended for SSN-23 in fiscal years 1996, 1997, 1998, and 1999;

(4) direct the Secretary of the Navy to solicit competitive proposals and award the contract or contracts for NAS, after the second NAS, on the basis of price;

(5) direct the Secretary of the Navy to take no action that would impair the design, engineering, construction, and maintenance competencies of either Electric Boat or Newport News to construct the NAS;

(6) direct the Secretary of the Navy to report every six months to the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate and the Committee on National Security of the House the obligation and expenditure of funds for SSN-23 and the NAS;

(7) authorize $814.5 million in fiscal year 1996 for design and advance procurement of the lead and second NAS, of which $10.0 million would be available only for participation of Newport News in the NAS design, and $100.0 million would be available only for advance procurement and design of the second submarine under the NAS program;

(8) place limits on the expenditure of advance procurement funds in fiscal year 1996 for the lead NAS, unless funds are also obligated or expended for the second NAS;

(9) authorized $802.0 million in fiscal year 1997 for advance procurement of the lead and second NAS, of which $75.0 million would be available only for participation by Newport News in the design of the NAS, and $427.0 million would be available only for advance procurement and design of the second submarine under the NAS program; and

(10) authorized $455.4 million, the budget request, for research, development, test, and evaluation for the NAS program.

The conferees agree to adopt a new provision dealing with the design and procurement of future Navy attack submarines. This provision would:

(1) authorize the SSN-23 at $700.0 million;

(2) authorize $804.5 million in fiscal year 1996 for design and advance procurement of the fiscal year 1998 and fiscal year 1999 submarines (previously designated by the Navy as the NAS), of which;

(a) $704.5 million would be available only for long-lead and advance construction and procurement for the fiscal year 1998 submarine, which would be built by Electric Boat; and

(b) $100.0 million would be available only for long-lead and advance construction and procurement for the fiscal year 1999 submarine, which would be built by Newport News;

(3) authorize $10.0 million only for participation of Newport News in the design of the submarine previously designated by the Navy as the NAS;

(4) establish a special bipartisan congressional panel that would be briefed, at least annually, by the Secretary of the Navy on the status of the submarine modernization program and submarine-related research and development;

(5) direct the Secretary of Defense, not later than March 15, 1996, to accomplish the following:

(a) develop and submit a detailed plan for development of a program that will lead to production of more capable, less expensive submarines than the submarine previously designated as the NAS;

(b) ensure the plan includes a program for the design, development, and procurement of four nuclear attack submarines that would be procured during fiscal years 1998 through 2001 with each successive submarine being more capable and more affordable;

(c) structure the program so that:

(i) one of the four submarines would be constructed with funds appropriated for each fiscal year from fiscal year 1998 through fiscal year 2001;

(ii) to ensure flexibility for innovation, the fiscal year 1998 and the fiscal year 2000 submarines would be constructed by Electric Boat and the fiscal year 1999 and the fiscal year 2001 submarines would be constructed by Newport News;

(iii) the design previously designated as the NAS would be used as the base design by both contractors:

(iv) each contractor would be called on to propose improvements, including design improvements, for each successive submarine so that each of them would be more capable, more affordable, and their design would lead to a design for a future class of nuclear attack submarines that would possess the latest, best, and most affordable technology; and

(v) the fifth and subsequent nuclear attack submarines, proposed for construction after SSN-23, would be procured after a competition based on price;

(d) the Secretary of Defense's plan would also:

(i) set forth a program to accomplish the design, development, and construction of the four submarines that would take maximum advantage of a streamlined acquisition process;

(ii) culminate in selection of a design for a next submarine for serial production not earlier than fiscal year 2003 with procurement to occur after a competition based on price;

(iii) identify advanced technologies that are in various phases of research and development, as well as those that are commercially available off-the-shelf, that are candidates for incorporation into the plan to design, develop, and procure the submarines;

(iv) designate the fifth submarine procured after SSN-23 to be the lead ship in a next generation submarine class, unless the Secretary of the Navy, in consultation with the special congressional submarine review panel, determines that more submarines should be built before the design of a new class of submarines is fixed, in which case the fifth and each successive submarine would be procured after a competition based on price; and

(v) identify the impact of the submarine program on the remainder of the Navy's shipbuilding account;

(6) impose certain limits on the amounts that can be obligated and expended on the SSN-23 and the fiscal year 1998 and 1999 submarines until:

(a) the Secretary of the Navy has certified in writing to the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate and the Committee on National Security of the House that procurement of future nuclear attack submarines, except as stipulated elsewhere in this provision, would be accomplished through a competition based on price; and

(b) the Secretary of Defense, not later than March 15, 1996, has:

(i) submitted the submarine design and procurement plan that would be required by the provision;

(ii) directed the Under Secretary of Defense (Comptroller) to incorporate the costs of the submarine design and procurement plan into the future years defense program, even if the total cost of the plan's program exceeds the President's budget; and

(iii) directed that the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology conduct oversight of the development and improvement of the nuclear attack submarine program of the Navy and established reporting procedures to ensure that officials of the Department of the Navy, who exercise management oversight of the program, report to the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology with respect to that program;

(7) direct the Secretary of Defense to use streamlined acquisition policies to reduce the cost and increase the efficiency of the submarine program;

(8) direct the Secretary of Defense to submit to Congress an annual update of the submarine design and procurement plan with the submission of the President's budget, for each of fiscal years 1998 through 2002;

(9) direct that funds authorized for fiscal year 1996 by this provision may not be obligated or expended during fiscal year 1996 for the fiscal year 1998 submarine unless funds are also obligated and expended during fiscal year 1996 for the fiscal year 1999 submarine;

(10) authorize the Secretary of the Navy to enter into contracts with Electric Boat and Newport News, and suppliers of components during fiscal year 1996 for:

(a) the procurement of long-lead components for the fiscal year 1998 submarine and the fiscal year 1999 submarine; and

(b) advance construction of long-lead components and other components for such submarines;

(11) authorize that, of the amount provided in section 201(4) of this Act for ARPA, that $100.0 million would be available only for development and demonstration of advanced technologies for incorporation into the submarines constructed as part of the submarine design and procurement plan specified under this provision, to include electric drive, hydrodynamic quieting, ship control automation, solid-state power electronics, wake reduction technologies, superconductor technologies, torpedo defense technologies, advanced control concepts, fuel cell technologies, and propulsors;

(12) direct that the Director of ARPA shall implement a rapid prototype acquisition strategy for both land-based and at-sea subsystem and system demonstrations of advanced technologies in concert with Electric Boat and Newport News: and

(13) define potential competitors, for the purposes of this provision, as those that have been awarded a contract by the Secretary of the Navy for construction of nuclear attack submarines during the past 10 years.

Research for advanced submarine technology (sec. 132)

The conferees agree to adopt a new provision that would direct that, of the amount appropriated for fiscal year 1996 for the national defense sealift fund, $50.0 million would be available only for the Director of the Advance Research Projects Agency for advanced submarine technology activities.

Cost limitation for Seawolf submarine program (sec. 133)

The Senate amendment would authorize the third Seawolf class submarine SSN-23. Consistent with this authorization, the Senate amendment included a provision (sec. 125) that would establish a combined cost cap on all three Seawolf submarines (SSN-21), SSN-22 and SSN-23). This cost cap would be in addition to a cost cap that Congress imposed on the first two Seawolf class submarines SSN-21 and SSN-22, in fiscal year 1995.

The House bill included a provision (sec. 132) that would repeal the cost cap on SSN-21 and SSN-22.

The conferees agree to adopt a new provision that would:

(1) establish a combined cost cap on the three Seawolf submarines (SSN-21, SSN-22, and SSN-23); and

(2) repeal the combined cost cap on SSN-21 and SSN-22 that was imposed by the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1995.

Repeal of prohibition on backfit of Trident submarines (sec. 134)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 131) that would repeal the provision of law that prohibits the backfit of Trident II (D-5) missiles into Trident I (C-4) missile-carrying submarines.

The Senate amendment contained an identical provision (sec. 122).

The conference agreement contains this provision.

The conferees endorse on all D-5 fleet of Trident submarines. But the conferees also believe that it is premature to rule out the option of retaining all 18 Trident submarines. Although the Nuclear Posture Review recommended a force of 14 Trident submarines equipped with the D-5 missile, circumstances may require the United States to retain a higher number of such submarines or, alternatively, reduce to a lower level.

Given this uncertainty, the conferees direct the Secretary of the Navy to take several actions: (1) fully fund all activities necessary for the backfitting of Trident II missiles into at least four west coast Trident submarines on the schedule recommended in the Nuclear Posture Review; and (2) continue to fund, in the fiscal year 1997 budget and in the Future Years Defense Program, adequate operational support for Trident I missiles to ensure the option of retaining all 18 Trident submarines on full operational status, assuming backfits of the final four submarines with D-5 missiles following the completion of the first four conversions.

Arleigh Burke class destroyer program (sec. 135)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 123) that would:

(1) authorize $650.0 million as the first increment of split funding for two Arleigh Burke class destroyers in accordance with a split funding provision (sec. 124) that was included elsewhere in the Senate amendment; and

(2) express the sense of Congress that the Secretary of the Navy should plan for and request the final increment of funding for the two Arleigh Burke class destroyers in fiscal year 1997, also in accordance with the split funding provision (sec. 124) of the Senate amendment.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees adopt a new provision that would:

(1) authorize six Arleigh Burke class destroyers;

(2) authorize $2.17 billion, the budget request, for the construction, including advance procurement, for Arleigh Burke class destroyers;

(3) authorize the Secretary of the Navy to enter into contracts in fiscal year 1996 for the construction of three Arleigh Burke class destroyers;

(4) authorize the Secretary of the Navy to enter into contracts in fiscal year 1997 for the construction of three Arleigh Burke class destroyers, subject to the availability of appropriations for such destroyers;

(5) continue the contract award pattern and sequence used by the Navy for the procurement of Arleigh Burke class destroyers in fiscal years 1994 and 1995;

(6) limit the liability of the government for these vessels to the amounts appropriated for them; and

(7) encourage, subject to a prior notification to the congressional defense committees, the Secretary of the Navy to use shipbuilding and conversion savings, that become excess to the needs of the Navy from other programs, to fully fund Arleigh Burke class destroyers contracts entered into under the terms of the provision.

Acquisition program for crash attenuating seats (sec. 136)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 126) that would allow the Secretary of the Navy to establish a program to procure and install commercially developed, energy absorbing, crash attenuating seats in H-53E helicopters. The Senate provision would allow the Secretary to use up to $10.0 million for the program out of unobligated balances in the Legacy Resource Management Program.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary to establish such a program.

The conferees acknowledge the potential value of crash attenuating seats for passengers in military helicopters, and expect the Department to proceed quickly to define the technical specification and qualification for non-developmental seats. The conferees further expect the Department to ensure the acquisition program incorporates full and open competition.

T-39N trainer aircraft (sec. 137)

The budget request did not include funds to purchase the T-39N aircraft the Department of the Navy now uses to train naval flight officers. The government leases these aircraft as part of a service contract. The lessor has offered to sell these aircraft to the government, rather than continue the current leasing arrangement.

The House bill and the Senate amendment would support the budget request.

The Senate report (S. Rept 104-112) would direct the Secretary of the Navy to provide analysis of the contractor's proposal to the Armed Services Committee of the Senate, so the proposal and the analysis could be reviewed for possible further action.

The conferees recommend $45.0 million for purchasing T-39N aircraft, subject to certain conditions. The conferees believe that the proposal deserves further review before purchasing these aircraft. The conferees expect the Department's analysis to answer, at a minimum, the following questions:

(1) What would be the status of the training program for which T-39Ns are currently leased?

(2) For what purpose would the Navy spend procurement funds in fiscal year 1996?

(3) Is funding for this project contained anywhere in the future years defense program (FYDP)? If there is funding, how much?

(4) Is there an approved requirement in the Navy for acquiring this capability? Does this requirement supplant or supplement the current mission that is being filled by the T-39N leasing program?

(5) How much funding beyond $45.0 million would be required to enable the T-39N system to meet future training requirements? If additional funds are required, how much of the additional cost is budgeted in the FYDP?

(6) What savings, in terms of both current and constant dollars, would accrue to the Navy by purchasing aircraft for this requirement on a non-competitive basis in fiscal year 1996, rather than selecting an aircraft under competitive procedures when the current lease program expires in fiscal year 1998? If savings will accrue, are they attributable to factors other than inflation? Are there savings in life cycle support costs beyond the initial acquisition costs?

(7) Would additional funding for the project now interfere with the Navy's opportunity to conduct a competitive procurement or better define the program's requirements?

(8) Are there other reasons that would prevent executing the program in fiscal year 1996?

(9) The conferees understand that the T-39N leasing contract provided for amortizing the full purchase price of the aircraft over the first five years of the lease. Since the contractor has already been reimbursed in full for purchase price, why would it be in the government's interests to pay more than a nominal amount for aircraft?

The conferees believe that the proposal to buy the aircraft could have merit; however, the conferees recommend a provision that would prohibit obligation of these acquisition funds until 60 days after the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology has submitted the analysis described above and has certified to the Armed Services Committee of the Senate and the National Security Committee of the House of Representatives that acquisition of the T-39N aircraft is in the best interest of the government and is the most cost effective alternative in meeting the requirements for training naval flight officers.

Pioneer unmanned aerial vehicle program (sec. 138)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 132) that would prohibit the Secretary of the Navy from spending more than one-sixth of the funds appropriated for fiscal year 1996, or any unobligated balances available from previous years, until the Secretary certifies that funds have been obligated to equip nine Pioneer Unmanned Aerial vehicle systems with the Common Automatic Landing and Recovery System (CARLS).

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Subtitle D—Air Force Programs

Repeal of limitations (secs. 141 and 142)

The budget request included $279.9 million for B–2 procurement and $623.6 million for B–2 research and development for a B–2 program consisting of twenty aircraft. The House bill contained a provision (sec. 141) that would repeal limitations on the B–2 program, and provide an increase of $553 million for B–2 procurement. The House bill would repeal:

Section 112 of the National Defense Act for Fiscal Years 1990 and 1991, which requires certification from the Secretary of Defense that the B–2 is meeting certain performance criteria.

Section 151(c) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993, which limits B–2 procurement to 20 bombers and one test aircraft.

Section 131(c) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1994, which reaffirms the twenty one aircraft limitation.

Section 131(d) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1994, which limits the total program costs to $28,968,000,000 in Fiscal Year 1981 constant dollars.

Section 133(e) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1995, which provides that none of the $125.0 million authorized and appropriated for the Enhanced Bomber Capability Fund may be obligated for advance procurement of new B–2 aircraft (including long lead items).

The Senate amendment contained no additional funds, nor did it contain any repeal of the limitations provision.

The conferees agree to an amendment that would repeal the limitations imposed on the scope of the B–2 program, while retaining requirements for B–2 performance compliance in both the present authorization and any possible future acquisition of the aircraft.

The conferees agree to authorize the budget request for research and development and to increase the authorization for procurement by $493.0 million. The conferees further agree that the $493.0 million may not be spent until March 31, 1996.

The conferees believe that the B–2 bomber represents a major technological advance in strategic bomber capabilities. However, if a decision were made to acquire additional B–2 bombers, their high cost would result in funding reductions in the Administration's five year defense program. Therefore, the Senate conferees believe that the increased authorization of $493.0 million provided for the B–2 bomber program may be expended only for procurement of B–2 components, upgrades, and modifications that would be of value for the existing fleet of B–2 bombers.

The conferees are concerned over the cost of producing modern, highly capable, long range bombers, and therefore strongly urge the Secretary of Defense to: (1) complete the study called for in section 133(d)(3) of the National Defense Act of 1995 (Public Law 103–337) for requirements formulation and conceptual studies for a conventional-conflict-oriented, lower-cost, next generation bomber; and (2) explore options, including adoption of streamlined acquisition policies and procedures, for reducing the costs of producing long-range bombers. Accordingly, the conferees agree to repeal the requirements contained in section 133(d)(3), which states that such a study may be carried out only if the previously-produced bomber force study found bomber capabilities to be inadequate.

The conferees note that section 133(d) permitted the Secretary to obligate up to $25.0 million of the $125.0 million authorized and appropriated in fiscal year 1995 for the Enhanced Bomber Capability Fund for such a study. The conferees direct that any remaining unobligated fiscal year 1995 funds from the $125.0 million made available for B–2 bomber industrial base preservation and next-generation bomber study shall promptly be merged with the $493.0 million in additional B–2 funds authorized in this Act.

In order to compare force capabilities with relative costs, the conferees urge the Secretary of Defense to provide a summary and detailed listing of program reductions and adjustments to the fiscal year 1997 budget request and the future years' defense program (FYDP) required by the possible acquisition of additional B–2 bombers. The Secretary should use the standard cost analysis approach used in the March 1995 Air Force cost estimate for further B–2 acquisition of one and one-half and three aircraft per year.

MC–130H Aircraft Program (sec. 143)

The conference agreement includes a new provision that would amend section 161 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 1990 and 1991 (P.L. 101–189) to enable obligation of funds for award fee and procurement of contractor furnished equipment.

The conferees understand that the Air Force desires to grant an award fee to the MC–130H Combat Talon II development contractor, but is prohibited from doing so by a provision of Public Law 101–189. The conferees note that the prohibitive legislative provision requires the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation (DOT&E) to certify that the MC–130H Combat Talon II terrain avoidance radar performs in accordance with requirements outlined in the test and Evaluation Master Plan (TEMP) approved by the DOT&E in September 1988. The conferees have been informed that the aircraft cannot be certified as having met TEMP criteria because a specific test criterion referred to in the TEMP has been determined to be unmeasurable.

The conferees agree to include a provision that would allow the DOT&E to certify to the congressional defense committees that the MC–130H terrain avoidance radar is operationally effective in order to release the award fee for the MC–130H. The conferees direct the DOT&E to report all unmeasurable test criteria included in the September 1988 TEMP that have been appropriately corrected.

Subtitle E—Chemical Demilitarization Program

Chemical agents and munitions destruction program (secs. 107, 151–153)

The budget request contained $746.7 million for operation and maintenance, research and development and procurement, for the defense chemical agents and munitions destruction program.

The House bill contained a series of provisions (secs. 106, 151–153, and 2407) that would: authorize the budget request; repeal a legislative requirement to develop a chemical demilitarization cryofracture facility; express congressional concern about the cost growth of destroying the unitary chemical stockpile and express a view that the Secretary of Defense should consider measures to reduce the overall cost; direct the Secretary of Defense to conduct a review and evaluation of issues associated with closure and reuse of the Department of Defense facilities that are co-located with the unitary chemical stockpile and demilitarization operations; and prohibit the obligation or expenditure of fiscal year 1996 funds, prior to March 1, 1996, for the construction of a chemical munitions incinerator facility at Umatilla Army Depot, Oregon.

The Senate amendment contained provisions (sec. 107 and 1099C) that would authorize $671.7 million for the chemical agents and munitions destruction program, and direct the Department of Defense to review and assess the risk associated with the transportation of any portion of the unitary chemical stockpile, such as drained chemical agents or munitions from one location to another within the continental United States, and review and evaluate issues associated with closure and reuse of the Department of Defense facilities that are co-located with the unitary chemical stockpile and demilitarization operations. The Senate report (S. Rept. 104–112) would recommend the use of unobligated fiscal years 1994 and 1995 procurement funds for procurement of equipment at Pine Bluff, Arkansas and Umatilla, Oregon.

The conferees agree to provisions that would authorize $672.3 million for the defense chemical agents and munitions program, to include: $265.0 million for procurement; $353.8 million for operations and maintenance; and $53.4 million for research and development. The provision would repeal the legislative requirement to develop a chemical demilitarization cryofracture facility.

Further, the conferees agree to provisions that would direct the Secretary of Defense to proceed with the destruction of the U.S. chemical stockpile using the current baseline technology. The conferees would also require the Secretary to ensure that support measures have been provided at each installation where a chemical agent and munitions demilitarization facility would be constructed, as required by the Department of Defense and the Department of Army regulations, the chemical demilitarization plans, and the Solid Waste Disposal Act permit. The conferees direct the Secretary to conduct an assessment of the current chemical demilitarization program and recommend measures that could reduce the total cost of the program. The provision would also direct the Secretary to review and evaluate issues associated with the closure and reutilization of Department of Defense facilities co-located with continuing chemical stockpile and chemical demilitarization operations.

The conferees agree to authorize the use of funds appropriated for the defense chemical agents and munitions destruction program to support travel and associated travel costs of Commissioners of the Citizens' Advisory Commissions, when such travel is conducted at the invitation of the Assistant Secretary of the Army for Research, Development and Acquisition. The provision would modify existing law to permit the appointment of a civilian as project manager for the chemical agent and munitions destruction program. The Department would also be required to provide a quarterly report to Congress on the use of such funds to pay for the travel and associated travel costs.

COST OF THE CHEMICAL AGENTS AND MUNITIONS DESTRUCTION PROGRAM

The conferees remain concerned about the escalating costs associated with the chemical agents and munitions destruction program. The program has grown from its original estimate of $1.7 billion in 1986 to the current estimated cost of $11.9 billion, with expectations that costs will further increase. Continued delays in proceeding with the demilitarization and destruction of the chemical stockpile have added to the overall increases in the program. The conferees believe that the program should proceed expeditiously and utilize technology that minimizes risks to the public and the environment.

The conferees are concerned that continued delays, related to site operation systemization, environmental permits, and construction of the demilitarization and destruction facilities, would increase the overall program costs and risks to the public and the environment.

Finally, as the Department reviews measures that could be implemented to reduce the growth of the program costs, the conferees expect the Secretary to consider the potential for reconfiguration of the stockpile, as described in the October 19, 1995 letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Army for Research, Development and Acquisition, and to ensure protection of the public and environment.

ALTERNATIVE TECHNOLOGIES

The Department of the Army is currently conducting research and development of chemical neutralization and biodegradation, in conjunction with neutralization, for use at the bulk-only storage sites. The conferees believe there is potential for the implementation of these processes at future demilitarization and destruction sites, which could reduce the requirement for a liquid incinerator. The conferees support the National Research Council's (NRC's) recommendation that the Army continues its current baseline incineration program until such time as the evaluation of these alternative technologies is concluded.

If the evaluation of the alternative technologies research and development program proves successful, the conferees would support inclusion of this process into the baseline process. In conducting the chemical demilitarization and destruction program and assessing measures to significantly reduce program costs, the conferees expect the Department to consider a wide range of alternatives to the current baseline incineration program, to include the use of alternative technologies.

Additionally, the conferees expect the Secretary's assessment of the current chemical demilitarization program and measures to reduce the overall cost of the program, to include a risk analysis specific to each chemical stockpile storage and demilitarization site, the results of the stockpile surveillance and stability analysis related to the physical and chemical integrity of the stockpile, and the potential reconfiguration of the chemical stockpile. In making such an assessment, the Secretary shall ensure the maximum protection of the environment, the general public, and the personnel involved in the destruction of the chemical stockpile, while minimizing total program costs. The conferees expect the assessment to yield potential revisions to the chemical agents and munitions destruction program that could reduce program costs and increase public safety.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Repeal of limitation on total cost for SSN–21 and SSN–22 Seawolf submarines

The budget request included $1.5 billion for construction of the third Seawolf class submarine, SSN–23.

The House bill would not authorize SSN–23. However, consistent with other actions taken by the House on SSN–22, the House bill contained a provision (sec. 132) that would eliminate the existing cost cap on the first two Seawolf class submarines.

The Senate amendment would authorize SSN–23. It did not contain a provision that would repeal the cost cap on SSN–21 and SSN–22.

The House recedes.

Competition required for selection of shipyards for construction of vessels for next generation attack submarine program

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 133) that would:

(1) require the Secretary of the Navy to select on a competitive basis the shipyard for construction of each vessel of the next generation attack submarine program; and

(2) stipulate that the next generation attack submarine program shall begin with the first submarine that is programmed to be constructed after the submarine that is programmed to be constructed in fiscal year 1998.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 121) that would address competition as an integral part of the broader issue of current and future nuclear submarine construction programs.

The House recedes.

The conferees agree to incorporate the issue of competition for future submarines into a new, more comprehensive provision dealing with future submarine development and procurement.

Sonobuoy programs

The budget request included $8.9 million for the procurement of AN/SSQ–53 sonobuoys and no funding for the procurement of AN/SSQ–110 sonobuoys.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 134) that would:

(1) stipulate that no fiscal year 1996 funds could be used for procurement of AN/SSQ–53 sonobuoys; and

(2) authorize $8.9 million for AN/SSQ–110 sonobuoys.

While the Senate amendment contained no similar provision, it did recommend funding adjustments to these two sonobuoy programs that would accomplish the intent underlying the House provision.

The conferees agree that the funding adjustment included in the House provision should be adopted, but do not believe that a legislative provision to that effect is necessary.

The House recedes.

Split funding for construction of naval vessels and incremental funding of procurement items

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 124) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to employ split funding for construction of certain naval vessels when developing the future years defense program. The provision would permit the Secretary to provide funding for these vessels over two years, but enter into a contract based on the first increment of funding. The intent of the provision would be to provide the Secretary with more flexibility to develop a uniform and cost effective shipbuilding program.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1007) that would prohibit the use of incremental funding, including split funding, for:

(1) the procurement of aircraft, missiles, or naval vessels;

(2) the procurement of tracked combat vehicles;

(3) the procurement of other weapons, and

(4) the procurement of naval torpedoes and related support equipment.

The House provision would not apply to funding classified as advance procurement funding.

These provisions were not included in the conference agreement.

Tier II predator unmanned aerial vehicle program

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 131) that would prohibit the obligation of funds appropriated or otherwise made available for the Department of Defense in fiscal year 1996 for the Tier II Predator Unmanned Aerial Vehicle.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Joint primary aircraft training system program

The budget request included $55.0 million for three joint primary aircraft training system (JPATS) aircraft. At the time of the budget submission, the Department of Defense (DOD) had not completed the JPATS competition. This amount was derived from an estimate of funding required to procure three aircraft from any of the potential competitors. After source selection, the Department determined that it could procure eight JPATS aircraft with the requested funds.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 133) that would increase the number of aircraft that the Department could procure, from three to eight, without changing the amount of the authorization.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees agree that the Air Force should buy up to eight aircraft with authorized funds.

Weapons industrial facilities

The budget request included $13.1 million for naval weapons industrial facilities.

The Senate amendment included a provision (sec. 391) that would authorize an increase of $2.0 million in operations and maintenance accounts for essential safety functions for the Allegany Ballistics Laboratory.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes. The conferees agree to provide an increase of $30.0 million for naval weapons industrial facilities for continuation of the facility restoration program at Allegany Ballistics Laboratory.

TITLE II—RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT, TEST, AND EVALUATION

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1996 contained an authorization of $34,331.9 million for Research and Development in the Department of Defense. The House bill would authorize $35,934.5 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $35,959.9 million. The conferees recommended an authorization of $35,730.4 million. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

Passive millimeter wave camera

The budget request did not include funds for the passive millimeter wave camera.

The House bill would add $6.0 million in PE 62120A for continuation of the program.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Tractor Rose

The budget request included $4.5 million for Tractor Rose.

The House bill would authorize the requested amount.

The Senate amendment would authorize an additional $13.5 million.

The conferees are aware of recent progress in the activities related to this program. As a consequence, the conferees recommend authorization of this project at the level of funds appropriated in fiscal year 1996. In addition, the conferees urge the Department of the Army to consider reprogramming funds below threshold to capitalize on the potential of this technology.

Electric gun technology

The budget request included $9.0 million for the electric gun exploratory development program.

The House bill would authorize an additional $6.0 million in PE 62618A to complete research team data gathering and assessment in order to refocus the effort on the most promising technologies.

The conferees agree to authorize an additional $7.0 million for electric gun technology and an additional $1.0 million for the electrothermal chemical gun.

Objective individual combat weapon (OICW)

The budget request included $5.1 million in PE 62623A and $4.5 million in PE 63607A for continuation of the joint service small arms program.

The House bill would authorize an additional $2.0 million in PE 63607A for an advanced technology demonstration of lightweight, medium caliber, multi-shot, antiarmor weapon technology for application to a next-generation objective individual combat weapon system (OICW) for the Army and the Marines. The House report (H. Rept. 104–131) expressed the concern that funds requested for the OICW in fiscal year 1996 are insufficient to adequately conduct this advanced technology program. The House report also encouraged the Secretary of the Army to examine the current development strategy for the OICW to support the joint small arms master plan (JSAMP) and to request reprogramming of funds to carry out the plan.

The Senate amendment would authorize the requested amount.

The House recedes. The conferees strongly support the development of advanced technology for advanced individual weapons systems, as outlined in the JSAMP, and share the concerns expressed in the House report regarding adequacy of funding for development of the OICW. The conferees encourage the Secretary of the Army to request reprogramming of additional funds to compensate for any fiscal year 1996 funding shortfalls in the OICW program. The conferees also encourage the Secretary to include additional funds in the fiscal year 1997 budget request for OICW.

Advanced battery technology

The budget request did not include funding for advanced batteries.

The House bill would authorize $3.0 million in PE 62705A for non-metallic lithium and low-cost reusable alkaline batteries.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees agree to the House authorization, but agree to provide only $2.0 million in PE 62705A.

Environmental policy simulation laboratory

The conferees agree that $3.0 million of the funds appropriated in PE 62720A shall be authorized for the establishment of an environmental policy simulation lab under the direction of the Army Environmental Policy Institute. The conferees further direct the Department of Defense to comply with the direction contained in the Senate report (S. Rept. 104–112) regarding the establishment of this lab.

Command, control, and communications technology

The budget request included $15.7 million in PE 62782A for the exploratory development of command, control, and communications technology.

The House bill would authorize the requested amount.

The Senate amendment would authorize an additional $2.0 million in PE 62782A as part of a general increase to address underfunding in the Army technology base.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees agree that the Army technology base has been underfunded in recent years. The conferees urge the Army leadership and the Office of the Secretary of Defense provide for balanced funding of the Army technology base program, as related to other Defense program accounts in the fiscal year 1997 budget request.

Medical advanced technology

The budget request included $11.8 million for medical advanced technology.

The House bill would include an additional $5.0 million for continuation of the battlefield tissue replacement program.

The Senate amendment would include an additional $3.0 million for telemedicine.

The conferees agree to authorize an additional $8.0 million for both of these programs and an additional $1.0 million for Army standardized testing of Trichloromelamine (TCM) in PE 63002A.

Aviation advanced technology

The budget request included $48.6 million for aviation advanced technology.

The House bill provided an additional authorization of $6.5 million for evaluation of the Starstreak missile and $10.0 million for tactical mobility technologies and designs, particularly related to the CH–47.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The conferees agree to authorize an additional $4.0 million in PE 63003A for the completion of the phase II air-to-air test and evaluation for Starstreak during fiscal year 1996 and $4.0 for modernization technologies and improvement designs for the CH–47D.

The Army is encouraged to provide sufficient funding in its fiscal year 1997 budget request for completion of the air-to-air Starstreak evaluation program and continuation of the CH–47D modernization program.

Weapons and munitions-advanced technology

The budget request included $18.8 million for weapons and munitions advanced technology.

The House bill would authorize an additional $2.0 million for the XM 982/155mm projectile development.

The Senate amendment would authorize the request.

The conferees agree to authorize $2.0 million for the XM 982/155mm projectile development, an additional $6.0 million for the precision guided mortar munition, and an additional $1.0 million for electrorheological fluid recoil in PE 63004A.

Command, control, and communications-advanced technology

The budget request included $16.9 million in PE 63006A for advanced development of command, control, and communications technology.

The House bill would authorize the requested amount.

The Senate amendment would authorize an additional $3.0 million to partially address funding shortfalls in the Army technology base for fiscal year 1996. The Senate amendment would also authorize an increase of $4.0 million in PE 63006A to develop and test wave net technology for possible application to the Army's digitization initiatives.

The conferees agree to authorize the additional $4.0 million to PE 63006A for development and testing of wave net technology.

Space applications technology program

The budget request included $16.9 million in PE 63006A for command, control, and communications advanced technology, including $498,000 for the Army's space applications technology program.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment would authorize the budget request for the Army's space applications technology program.

The conferees agree to an additional $5.0 million in PE 63006A for the space applications technology program. The conferees are aware of the program's success in demonstrating global positioning system and Wrasse weather data receivers during Operation Desert Storm/Desert Shield and other space technology applications, such as, the location of high value targets using hyperspectral sensing techniques, high data rate satellite communications on the move, and down link weather satellite technology. The conferees encourage the Army to continue support to the program in future budget requests.

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome

The budget request included $2.9 million in PE 63105A.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment authorized the requested amount.

The conferees agree to authorize the requested amount and concur with the Senate report (S. Rept. 104–112) that directed at least $1.0 million of the authorized amount be used to continue domestic clinical HIV programs.

Joint precision strike demonstration programs

The budget request included $34.1 million in PE 63238A for the joint air-land-sea precision strike demonstration (JPSD) program.

The House bill would direct that the JPSD program be expanded into a jointly manned program, with participation by all military services, and would recommend an increase of $4.0 million for this purpose.

The Senate amendment would authorize the requested amount.

The House recedes. The conferees agree with the views expressed in the House report (H. Rept. 104–131) on the progress made by the Army in demonstrating advanced concepts for attack of time-critical targets. The conferees also agree with the House report recommendations for increased participation by the other military services in the JPSD. Attack of time-critical targets on the battlefield is a joint issue which requires the coordinated efforts of all the military services.

Missile and rocket advanced technology

The budget request included $123.9 million in PE 63313A for missile and rocket advanced technology.

The House bill would reduce the requested amount by $12.1 million by making the following adjustments: adding $2.5 million for low cost autonomous attack submunition (LOCAAS) and $5.0 million for low-cost guidance development for the multiple launch rocket system (MLRS); and reducing the amount requested for the rapid force projection initiative by $19.6 million.

The Senate amendment would increase the requested amount by $12.0 million, with $5.0 million for LOCAAS and $7.0 million for low-cost guidance for MLRS.

The conferees agree to authorize a total of $118.9 million in PE 63313A. The conferees agree to reduce the requested amount by $7.5 million for the Enhanced-Fiber Optic Guided (E-FOG) missile system, as a result of concerns expressed in the House report (H. Rept. 104–131), and to add $2.5 million for LOCAAS within PE 63313A. The conferees would also increase the requested amount by $2.5 million for LOCAAS in PE 63601F for the Air Force. The conferees continue to support low-cost guidance for the MLRS and urge the Army to reprogram funds for this program in fiscal year 1996 and to request adequate funds in the fiscal year 1997 budget request.

Landmine warfare and barrier advanced technology

The budget request included $18.8 million for landmine warfare, and barrier advanced technology.

The House bill would authorize an additional $10.0 million for continuation of the landmine neutralization program.

The Senate amendment would approve the budget request.

The conferees agree to authorize an increase of $6.0 million for PE 63604A. Of this increase, $3.0 million will be used for landmine detection and clearance technology development, and $3.0 million will be used for the accelerated development and testing of the Ground Penetrating Radar.

Comanche helicopter (RAH-66)

The budget request included $199.1 million to continue development of the Comanche scout/attack helicopter.

The House bill would authorize an increase of $100.0 million for Comanche research and development.

The Senate amendment would authorize an increase of $174.0 million and require the Department of Defense and the Department of the Army to develop a plan to provide for procurement of Comanche helicopters, not later than fiscal year 2001, with initial operating capability by fiscal year 2003.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment would add $10.0 million to PE 64604A for initiation of a five-ton truck extended service program (ESP), and $9.4 million to PE 26624M for additional medium truck variants and development of simulation models and testing.

The conferees agree to provide $1.5 million in PE 64604A for the Army's five-ton ESP and $3.5 million for the Marine Corps in PE 26624M for initiation of a medium tactical vehicle replacement (MTVR).

The conferees agree with the section of the Senate Report (S. Rept. 104–112) that deals with the medium tactical truck extended service program, including the requirements for a report from the Secretary of the Army on the medium truck ESP.

As the manager of tactical vehicles for the Department of Defense, the conferees expect the Army to manage the Army five-ton truck ESP and the Marine Corps MTVR program and ensure that Air Force and Navy requirements are included in executing the Army ESP. The conferees expect the Army to take maximum advantage of medium truck ESP currently underway, to minimize additional procurements to avoid industrial overcapacity, and to give consideration to reliable manufacturers that have demonstrated capabilities to produce military trucks.

Heavy tactical vehicles

The House bill would provide an increase of $2.75 million in PE 64622A, $1.9 million for water heater/chiller development for the Army's water tank semitrailer, and $.85 million for a palletized loading system technology demonstration.

The Senate amendment would provide an increase of $1.9 million in PE 64622A for water heater/chiller development for the Army's water tank semitrailer.

The Senate recedes.

High mobility multipurpose wheeled vehicle extended service program

The Senate amendment would include an increase of $5.0 million in PE 64642A to initiate an extended service program (ESP) for the high mobility multipurpose wheeled vehicle (HMMWV).

The conferees recognize that the HMMWV fleet is reaching age and mileage levels leading to increased maintenance and operating costs and lower reliability. The conferees agree to provide an increase of $2.0 million for initiation and prototype development for HMMWV ESP.

The conferees direct the Secretary of the Army to submit, with the fiscal year 1997 budget request, a report to the congressional defense committees that describes a program to develop and test prototypes, and to initiate a joint program to remanufacture HMMWV's for the Army and the Marine Corps, harmonizing their requirements for ESP. The conferees further direct the Secretary of the Army and the Secretary of the Navy to ensure this program is fully funded in future budgets.

Automated test equipment development

The budget request included $5.4 million for automated test equipment development.

The House bill would authorize an additional $10.0 million in PE 64746A for the integrated family of test equipment.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Joint surveillance target attack radar system

The budget request included $18.8 million for the Army and $169.7 million for the Air Force for the Joint Surveillance Target Attack Radar System (JSTARS).

The House bill would authorize an increase in the Air Force requested amount, $14.0 million to establish a NATO program office and $20.0 million for development of an improved data modem and satellite communications capability.

The Senate amendment would authorize no additional funding for these programs.

The conferees agree to authorize an additional $9.5 million in PE 64770A for the Army Ground Station Module, in support of the NATO Alliance Ground Surveillance program, and an additional $24.5 million in PE 64770F, with $4.5 million for the Air Force portion of the JSTARS NATO Alliance Ground Surveillance program and $20.0 million for development of an improved data modem and satellite communications capability.

Weapons and munitions-engineering development

The budget request included $15.9 million for weapons and munitions-engineering development.

The House bill would authorize an additional $2.7 million for type classification of a soft mount for the MK–19 and $1.6 million for the 120mm practice cartridge XM–931 training round.

The Senate amendment would authorize $0.5 million for type classification of a non-developmental universal mounting bracket for the MK–19 grenade machine gun.

The conferees agree to authorize $0.5 million for the type classification of the MK–19 mounting bracket and $1.6 million for the 120mm practice cartridge in PE 64802A.

Battlefield combat identification system (BCIS)

The conferees are disappointed with the fiscal constraints that precluded full funding of the administration's $30.5 million request for non-cooperative target recognition (PE 64817A), particularly in relation to the battlefield combat identification system (BCIS). Fratricide on the battlefield is of great concern to our fighting forces, and BCIS is expected to significantly enhance the Army's ability to deal with this critical issue. The system has performed extremely well in Army testing to date, and the program enjoys widespread support, both within the military services and the warfighting Commanders-in-Chief. The conferees encourage the Secretary of the Army to aggressively pursue the program, and would entertain a reprogramming request to fund additional BCIS units or accelerated BCIS development.

Joint warfighter interoperability demonstration

The budget request included $46.5 million in PE 65712A for support of Army operational testing.

The House bill would recommend an additional $1.5 million for support of a joint warfighter interoperability demonstration, one of the key fiscal year 1996 funding shortfalls identified during evaluation of the Department of the Army budget request.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The conferees agree to authorize an additional $1.5 million in PE 23758A for support of the joint warfighting interoperability demonstration, as recommended in the House bill.

Missile/air defense product improvement

The budget request included $17.1 million for the missile/air defense product improvement program element.

The House bill would authorize an increase of $9.8 million for the evaluation of Stinger block II.

The Senate amendment would also authorize $9.8 million for Stinger, and an additional $35.0 million for Patriot cruise missile defense.

The conferees agree to authorize $61.9 million in PE 23801A, an increase of $44.8 million for both programs.

Instrumented factory for gear development

The budget request did not include funding for the continuation of the instrumented factory gear (INFAC).

The House bill would authorize an additional $5.0 million for INFAC in PE 78045A.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Polycrylonitrile carbon fibers

The budget request did not include funding for polycrylonitrile (PAN) fiber development.

The House bill would authorize an additional $4.0 million for PAN fibers in the Army MANTECH program.

The Senate amendment would authorize an additional $4.0 million for PAN fibers in the Army materials technology program.

The conferees agree to authorize an additional $4.0 million for this PAN fibers program in PE 78045A.

Rotary winged aircraft repair

The budget request included no funding for manufacturing technology related to rotary winged aircraft repair.

The House bill would fence $1.5 million of the Army MANTECH program for technologies related to industrial-academic partnerships for repair technology development and insertion for rotary winged aircraft.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees agree to authorize $1.5 million for the program in PE 78045A.

Task Force XXI Soldier

The conferees agree to authorize $30.0 million for a program that consolidates the Army's Land warrior and Generation II (GEN II) soldier programs. The conferees agree to the following adjustment for the purpose of program consolidation:

	Millions
PE 63001A—Logistics Advanced Technology	−$4.9
PE 63710A—Night Vision Advanced Technology	−4.2
PE 63772A—Advanced Tactical Computer Science and Technology	−5.0
PE 63747A—Soldier Support and Survivability	−25.9
Task Force XXI Soldier	+30.0

The conferees believe that the Army must examine and consider a full range of alternatives, including expansion of the dismounted soldier system of the applique program, execution of the Land Warrior program, and acceleration of the GEN II advanced technology demonstrator, to the extent that they support the new consolidated program.

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1996 contained an authorization of $8,204.5 million for Navy, Research and Development in the Department of Defense. The House bill would authorize $8,516.5 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $8,624.2 million. the conferees recommended an authorization of $8,474.8 million. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

Long-range guided projectile technology

The budget request contained $32.7 million for development and demonstration of the advanced global positioning system/inertial navigation system (GPS/INS) guidance and control technology for long range precision guided munitions used by Navy surface fire support and Army long-range artillery.

The House bill would authorize an additional $9.0 million to accelerate the development and demonstration of the GPS/INS.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment.

The conferees agree to an additional $2.0 million in PE 62111N for the purposes indicated in the House report (H. Rept. 104–131). The conferees are aware of a demonstrated rapid progress in the development and demonstration of miniaturized, gun-hardened GPS/INS technology in the Army's Low-Cost Competent Munition (LCCM) Program, the Navy's advanced technology demonstration program for an extended range guided projectile, and the cooperative LCCM technology program established between Departments of the Army and the Navy. The conferees believe that the technology may significantly improve the accuracy of existing and future gun-fired projectiles, missiles, and rockets, and that an opportunity exists to accelerate development and demonstration in these areas. The conferees strongly encourage increased funding in this area in future Army and Navy budget requests.

Surface ship technology

The budget request included $36.8 million for surface ship technology.

The House bill would authorize an additional $6.0 million for power electronics building blocks and $10.0 million for advanced submarine technology development.

The Senate amendment would authorize an additional $6.0 million for power electronics building blocks.

The conferees agree to authorize $67.8 million in PE 62121N; an increase of $31.0 million. That authorization includes $6.0 million for power electronics building blocks, $10.0 million for advanced submarine technology development and $15.0 million for curved plate technology for ship construction.

Power electronic building blocks

The budget request did not include funding for the power electronic building blocks project.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment contained $6.0 million in PE 62121N to initiate a power electronics program based on metal oxide semiconductor (MOS) control thyristors for high speed switching.

The conferees agree that the program should be affiliated with academic institutions and, as recommended by the Senate, involve a computational test bed for system simulation. The conferees agree that at least one-third of the funding should be for university participation.

Flat panel, helmet-mounted display

The budget request included $7.0 million in PE 62122N for exploratory development of air vehicle technology.

The House bill would authorize an additional $2.5 million to continue exploratory development of flat panel, helmet-mounted displays for air crew helmets.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The Senate recedes.

Communications technology

The budget request included $9.2 million in PE 62232N to continue development of key communications technologies for air, ship, and submarine platforms.

The House bill would authorize an additional $4.0 million for support of wireless and satellite communications research in the areas of integrated antenna systems, communications hardware design, communication algorithm development and high-frequency device modeling and measurements.

The Senate amendment contained no similar recommendation.

The House recedes. The conferees recognize the importance of continued wireless and satellite communications research in the areas recommended in the House report (H. Rept. 104–131).

Air crew adaptive automation technology

The budget request included $40.5 million in PE 62233N for exploratory development of enabling readiness, training, and environmental technologies that support the manning, operation, and maintenance of fleet assets, and that provide the necessary training, facilities, and equipment to maintain operational forces in a high state of readiness.

The House bill would authorize an additional $2.7 million to continue development of adaptable automation technology for management of air crew workloads.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The House recedes.

Embedded sensors

The budget request included $74.8 million in PE 62234N for exploratory development in the areas of materials, electronics, and computer technology in support of Navy advanced weapon and platform systems.

The House bill would authorize an additional $3.0 million to complete the exploratory development of embedded, remotely queried, microelectromechanical sensors in thick composites, which would be suitable for use in submarine, ships, and armored vehicles.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The Senate recedes.

Parametric airborne dipping sonar

The budget request included $51.2 million for exploratory development of undersea surveillance and weapons technology.

The Senate amendment would authorize an additional $4.8 million in PE 62314N to expand to current scope of the demonstration and evaluation of parametric sonar technology to provide three dimensional stabilized steerable beams, around 360 degrees, at full source level, further characterize the technology for mine avoidance implications, and evaluate whether parametric sonar technology merits further development.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees agree that the Navy should complete evaluation of the limited capability laboratory prototype, in-depth technical review and assessment of the potential of parametric sonar for helicopter application, and in-water testing and evaluation of the parametric airborne dipping sonar prototype.

Polar Ozone Aerosol Monitor III

The budget request included $45.5 million for exploratory development of oceanographic and atmospheric technology, in support of joint warfare mission area capabilities.

The House bill would authorize an additional $5.0 million to complete engineering, integration and test of the Polar Ozone Aerosol Monitor (POAM) III payload on the SPOT 4 spacecraft, in anticipation of system launch in 1997.

The Senate amendment included no similar provision.

The conferees agree to authorize an additional $2.5 million in PE 62435N to continue engineering, integration and test of the POAM III payload on the SPOT 4 spacecraft. The conferees encourage the Secretary of the Navy to reprogram those funds necessary to complete the program and launch the POAM III payload on the SPOT 4 spacecraft in 1997.

Air crew protective clothing and devices

The budget request included $1.7 million in PE 63216N for demonstration and validation of air crew protective clothing and devices.

The House bill would authorize an additional $7.4 million to the budget request to continue development of the advanced integrated life support system and of an advanced technology escape system for air crews. The House report (H. Rept. 104–131) also directed the Navy to provide, by March 2, 1996, a report that would describe the program plan for these two programs and the coordination of each plan with programs under consideration in the Air Force and the Army.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees direct the Secretary of the Navy to submit the report described in the House report (H. Rpt. 104–131).

Air systems and weapons advanced technology

The budget request included $17.1 million for air systems advanced technology in PE 63217N. The request contained no specific funding for the maritime avionics subsystems and technology (MAST) program. MAST is a fiscal year 1995 "new start" that focuses on the development of scaleable, open, fault-tolerant, and common avionics architectures.

The House bill would authorize an additional $35.0 million for the advanced anti-radiation guided missile (AARGM). The House report (H. Rept. 104–131) encouraged the Navy and the Air Force to pursue the technology objectives of the MAST program under respective avionics technology development programs and the Joint Advanced Strike Technology (JAST) program.

The Senate amendment would authorize an additional $9.0 million for rapid response technologies.

The conferees agree to authorize an additional $35.0 million in PE 63217N for AARGM and $9.0 million for rapid response technologies for the specific purposes detailed in the respective House and Senate reports (H. Rept. 104–131; S. Rept. 104–112). The conferees also agree to authorize an additional $10.0 million for continuation of the MAST program in fiscal year 1996, and recommend that the Secretary of the Navy consider requirements for continuation of the MAST program in the Navy's fiscal year 1997 budget request.

Mobile off-shore base (MOBS)

The budget request included $14.7 million in PE 63238N to begin using ARPA developed technology for a mobile offshore base (MOB) and to initiate sub-scale tests of a complete system for the purpose of evaluating risks associated with full scale construction.

The House bill would authorize the budget request. The House report (H. Rept. 104–131), citing the potential cost of the MOBS system, noted that the Department of Defense had failed to comply with guidance provided in the Statement of Managers (H. Rept. 103– 701) accompanying the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1995 (Public Law 103-337). The House report directed that any fiscal year 1996 funds authorized and appropriated for MOBS or for the Landing Ship Quay/Causeway not be obligated until the Department provides the reports and certification previously directed by Congress.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The House recedes from its restriction on the obligation of fiscal year 1996 funds for the MOBS project. The conferees note, however, the point made in the House report (H. Rept. 104-131) about the large potential cost of the MOBS program if carried to completion. The conferees further note that, in accordance with section 2430, title 10, United States Code, MOBS qualifies as an Acquisition Category I major defense acquisition program. Therefore, it is subject to the review and approval procedures for major defense acquisition programs established in Department of Defense instructions, regulations, and procedures. Under these review and approval procedures, a Milestone 0 (concept exploration and definition) review of the MOBS project is required by the Defense Acquisition Board (DAB). The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to report to the congressional defense committees, by March 31, 1996, the plan and schedule for incorporating MOBS into the DAB process and accomplishing a Milestone 0 review.

Medical development

The conferees agreed to authorize an additional $1.0 million (PE 63706N) for acceleration of blood storage development and an additional $3.0 million (PE 63706N) for the Naval Biodynamics Laboratory (NBDL) for infrastructure transfer activities.

Sensor integration and decision support systems

The budget request contained $17.8 million in PE 63707N for advanced development of manpower, personnel, and training technology, including $1.1 million for air human factors engineering.

The House bill would authorize an additional $1.5 million in PE 63707N for development and evaluation of intelligent, multisource, multi-platform sensor integration and cockpit decision support systems.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The House recedes.

Navy advanced technology demonstration

The budget request included $96.8 million in PE 63792N for advanced development and demonstration of high payoff, emerging technologies that could significantly improve Navy warfighting capabilities.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The conferees agree that the program for advanced technology demonstration of low cost, highly accurate guidance and control for improved naval surface fire support from surface 5" guns shall be fully funded at the level established in the budget request.

Remote controlled minehunting vehicle

The budget request included $7.6 million in PE 63502N for development and demonstration of improvements in minehunting sonar and remotely controlled minehunting systems.

The House bill would authorize an additional $1.65 million in PE 63502N to accelerate the remote minehunting operational prototype (RMOP) development program and provide an interim operational capability to the fleet.

The Senate amendment would authorize an additional $7.5 million in PE 63502N to accelerate development of RMOP.

The Senate recedes. The conferees agree that the mine detection and location capability demonstrated by the RMOP vehicle during a joint amphibious exercise in March-April 1995 suggests that it has the potential to fill a gap in the Navy's mine countermeasures operational capabilities. Therefore, the conferees conclude that the RMOP program should be accelerated to provide a contingency capability for fleet use. The conferees encourage the Secretary of the Navy to include additional funds for this purpose in the fiscal year 1997 budget request.

Non-acoustic antisubmarine warfare program

The House bill would authorize $23.2 million to reestablish a separate Navy non-acoustic antisubmarine warfare (NAASW) program in PE 63528N that would be on par with the Department of Defense's advanced sensor applications program.

The Senate amendment contained no funding for a Navy specific research and development program. However, the Senate amendment did provide $10.0 million of additional funding in PE 63714D, the Department of Defense's advanced sensor applications program, to continue development for a NAASW program, ATD-111, that is being executed by the Navy.

The conferees authorize an increase of $10.0 million in PE 63528N for the ATD-111 NAASW program. The funding is authorized to: (1) test system upgrades; (2) correct system defects identified during field tests; (3) bring the test systems to a common configuration; and (4) evaluate carriage on alternate airborne platforms.

The conferees recommend that the Navy conduct a comparative evaluation of the ATD-111 laser radar (LIDAR) system with other approaches. Comparative testing of competing non-acoustic approaches to antisubmarine warfare and other applications should provide a basis for establishing a firm requirement for follow-on systems.

The conferees also agree that there is a need for two viable, independent, but coordinated and complementary NAASW programs, one in the Navy and one in the Office of the Secretary of Defense. To reestablish the Navy's independent NAASW program, the conferees encourage the Secretary of the Navy to provide funding for it in the fiscal year 1997 budget request. Further guidance with respect to the NAASW program is contained in the classified annex.

Advanced submarine technology development

The budget request included $18.4 million in PE 62121N for exploratory development of submarine systems technology and $30.9 million in PE 63561N for advanced submarine systems development.

The House bill would authorize an increase of $10.0 million in PE 62121N. Of this amount, $7.0 million is to continue the transfer of technology to the Navy for active control of machinery platforms demonstrated in the Advanced Research Projects Agency's (ARPA's) Project M. The House bill would also authorize an additional $13.1 million in PE 63561N. The House report (H. Rept. 104-131) expressed concern over the overall reduction in submarine research and development funding, reflecting in the budget request, and the belief that this level of funding would be inadequate to support the type of long-term research necessary to ensure the availability of advanced technologies that could maintain the superior technological capability of the U.S. submarine force. The House report directed the Secretary of Defense to develop a plan for long-term submarine research and development aimed at ensuring U.S. technological superiority and to report this plan to the congressional defense committees with the submission of the fiscal year 1997 budget request.

The Senate amendment would approve the budget request.

The conferees agree to an increase of $10.0 million in PE 62121N. This increase would not include any reservations for ARPA's Project M. The conferees would authorize the transition effort associated with Project M in PE 63569E. The conferees also agree to an increase of $20.0 million in PE 63561N. The conferees would also adopt a provision, discussed in greater detail in the procurement section of the conference report, that would direct the Secretary of the Defense to develop a plan for long-term submarine research and development aimed at ensuring U.S. technological superiority and to report this plan to the congressional defense committees no later than March 15, 1996.

Intercooled recuperated gas turbine engine

The budget request included $25.6 million in PE 63508N, a technology base program element, for continued development of the intercooled recuperated (ICR) gas turbine.

The House bill expressed concern that the budget request had transferred the ICR gas turbine engine from the Advanced Surface Machinery (ASM) Program (PE 63573N), where it had been previously budgeted, because of the possibility of disruption in the relationship between the ICR program and other elements of the ASM program. In order to restore ASM program integrity, the House bill would direct the transfer of $25.6 million from PE 63508N to PE 63573N. Additionally, the House bill would increase funding for the ICR engine by $21.5 million to support ICR engine tests at the Navy's land-based test site and, based on elements of the Navy's revised ICR development plan, direct the Navy to proceed with a second 500 hour engine test and other associated testing at the site.

The Senate amendment also directed transfer of $25.6 million from PE 63508N to PE 63573N, but did not increase funding for the ICR engine.

The conferees agree to a funding level of $82.9 million in PE 63573N. The conferees direct that, of the total amount authorized for PE 63573N, $41.0 million is authorized for the ICR program.

Cooperative engagement capability

The budget request included $180.0 million in PE 63755N for development of the cooperative engagement capability (CEC).

The House bill would authorize the requested amount, but would direct that no more than $102.0 million be obligated until the Secretary of Defense notifies the congressional defense committees that the test and evaluation master plan for the CEC program has been approved by the Director, Operational Test and Evaluation.

The Senate amendment would add $22.5 million to continue accelerated development of the airborne component of CEC and an additional $20.0 million to accelerate joint Army-Navy and Air Force-Navy exploitation of CEC for cruise missile defense and theater missile defense.

The conferees agree to an additional $42.5 million for CEC for the purposes described in Senate amendment. The House recedes from its funding limitation. The conferees note the concerns expressed in the House report (H. Rept. 104-131) regarding developmental testing and independent operational testing required to insure that the CEC is operationally effective and suitable when deployed to the fleet. They direct the Secretary of the Navy to submit to the congressional defense committees, by March 31, 1996, a report on the status of plans for developmental and independent operational testing of the CEC.

Naval surface fire support

The Navy's budget request included $12.0 million in PE 63795N to develop the gun weapon system technology needed by the Navy to resolve major deficiencies in its ability to provide naval surface fire support (NSFS) to amphibious operations.

The House report (H. Rept. 104–131) noted that the budget request was sharply reduced during the budget formulation process. It further observed that the future years defense plan for gun system technology had been left under funded by over $160 million and did not include an adequate plan to meet long-term requirements for advanced NSFS weapons systems. To address these concerns the House bill would increase funding in PE 63795N by $25.0 million to:

(1) accelerate the development of a long range guided projectile that would incorporate advanced low cost global positioning system/inertial navigation system (GPS/INS) guidance;

(2) improve the existing MK–45 5-inch naval gun; and

(3) permit the Navy to place increased emphasis on satisfying long-term requirements for advanced gun systems in addition to its near-term focus on modifications to the MK–45 gun.

The Senate amendment would add $19.2 million to PE 63795N. The Senate's evaluation noted in the Senate report (S. Rept. 104–112) of the Navy's NSFS program, as reflected in the budget request, yielded conclusions similar to those of the House.

The conferees note that in May 1995 the Secretary of the Navy, based on a recently completed cost and operational effectiveness analysis (COEA), reported the following conclusions to Congress regarding NSFS:

(1) a 155 millimeter/60-caliber naval gun, employing precision guided munitions, is the most cost effective NSFS solution; and

(2) a combination of guns, missiles, and tactical aviation is needed to fully meet NSFS requirements.

The Secretary also reported that, as a result of the NSFS COEA, the Navy's NSFS program had been structured to:

(1) proceed with the long-term development of a 155 millimeter gun;

(2) develop a gun-launched precision guided munition; and

(3) modify the Navy's existing MK–45, 5-inch gun to deal with long-term and near-term challenges.

However, as reflected in the budget request, affordability constraints and a desire to field an enhanced NSFS capability prior to Fiscal Year 2001 have moved the Navy to embrace a near-term program reflecting the following priorities:

(1) develop a global positioning system/inertial navigation system 5-inch guided projectile;

(2) improve the existing MK–45 5-inch gun; and

(3) demonstrate the NSFS capabilities of Army Tactical Missile System (ATACMS), Sea Standoff Land Attack Missile (SLAM), and STANDARD Missiles.

To confirm the cost effectiveness of this near-term approach, which was not thoroughly evaluated in the NSFS COEA, the Navy has directed the Center for Naval Analysis to perform supplemental analysis to evaluate its cost effectiveness. The need for this supplemental analysis was reinforced by the General Accounting Office, which strongly recommended in May 1995 that the Navy revalidate its NSFS requirements and conduct a comprehensive supplemental analysis to the COEA that would include all available gun and missile alternatives.

The conferees agree to authorize $34.0 million, an increase of $22.0 million, in PE 63795N. Over the past several years, the conferees have repeatedly stressed the issue of NSFS, but have found the Navy's response to be highly variable as new programs or approaches have succeeded one another from year to year. Because of a strong need and the Navy's apparent commitment to pursue the program to completion, the conferees are willing to provide initial support, in fiscal year 1996, to the Navy's effort to upgrade the capability of its 5-inch guns and projectiles. The conferees take this action based on the Navy leadership's assurances that the Navy will follow through with consistent, stable, and adequate future years funding.

The conferees affirm their conclusion that the Navy needs to place increased emphasis on pursuing a long-term program to satisfy NSFS mission requirements. The conferees direct that the Secretary of the Navy include a report on the plans for such a program in the fiscal year 1997 budget submission. The conferees also affirm the need for an updated COEA that considers all available gun and missile alternatives, including extended range multiple launch rockets and existing and improved 5-inch guns, to support future acquisition milestone decisions related to the Navy's near-term and long-term programs.

AH-1W integrated weapons system upgrade

The budget request included $14.9 million in PE 64212N for engineering and manufacturing development of upgrades to the AH–IW Cobra attack helicopter for the Marine Corps.

The House bill recommended a reduction of $11.6 million to the budget request, based on the understanding that the Marine Corps had decided to suspend development of the integrated weapon system (IWS) for the AH–1W.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The House recedes. The conferees understand that the Department of the Navy has suspended the IWS upgrade, based on identification of other urgent requirements for modification of Marine Corps helicopters. The upgrade program would now focus on the adaptation of both the AH–1W attack helicopter and the UH–1N utility helicopter, and their respective power trains, to a 4–blade rotor system which will increase the operational safety power margin and useful mission payload of both helicopters. The IWS upgrade for the AH–1W will be deferred until later in the program. The conferees further understand, based upon the Department's analysis, that the revised program will provide growth potential to bridge the gap until the joint replacement aircraft would become available around the year 2020, and is reportedly more cost effective than the adoption of other, more modern attack and utility helicopters that have already been fielded or are under development.

The conferees note that the Department plans a defense acquisition milestone II decision to proceed with engineering and manufacturing development in late fiscal year 1996 and also plans to use the fiscal year 1996 funds made available for the program for pre-milestone IV/II engineering studies. The conferees are aware of a Department of the Navy experience with harmonic coupling problems encountered during a previous major helicopter power train upgrade that contributed to a number of aircraft mishaps. Accordingly, this issue must be addressed in detail during pre-milestone engineering studies and in the milestone II decision process, and the absence of the problem demonstrated prior to milestone III. The Secretary of the Navy is directed to report the results of these engineering studies and the milestone II decision with the submission of the fiscal year 1998 budget request.

AV–8B Harrier weapons system improvements

The budget request included $11.3 million in PE 64214N for integration and testing of weapons and aircraft improvements for the AV–8B Harrier aircraft.

The House bill would authorize an increase of $15.6 million to the budget request to support the United States' share of the AV–8B production memorandum of understanding between the United States, Spain, and Italy, and for concurrent integration of the AIM–120 missile and 1760 data bus during remanufacture of the day-only AV–8As to the AV–8B radar configuration.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The Senate recedes. The conferees agree to authorize the increase of $15.6 million to the budget request with the increase of $15.6 million to the budget request with the understanding that the Department of the Navy would include in the fiscal year 1997 budget request the balance of the $11.7 million required by the memorandum of understanding.

S–3B Project Gray Wolf

The budget request included $12.9 million in PE 64217N for continued development of weapon system improvements for the S–3 aircraft.

The House bill would authorize an additional $15.0 million for continued evaluation and potential establishment of an advanced concept technology demonstration of "Project Gray Wolf", a fleet proof of concept demonstration of the ability of an S–3B aircraft equipped with a multi-mode synthetic aperture radar designed to provide real time stand-off surveillance, targeting, and strike support for littoral operations.

The Senate amendment would authorize an additional $13.2 million for the same purpose.

The conferees agree to authorize the requested amount.

The conferees agree that "Project Gray Wolf" demonstrates potential for providing the Department of the Navy with a versatile carrier-based capability provide real time, stand-off surveillance, targeting, and strike support. The conferees encourage the Secretary of the Navy to consider a reprogramming request to support this program, should any funds become available during fiscal year 1996. The conferees further encourage the Secretary to include funds for the program in his fiscal year 1997 budget request.

P–3 maritime patrol aircraft sensor integration

The budget request included $1.9 million in PE 64221N for the P–3 maritime patrol aircraft (MPA) modernization program.

The House bill would authorize an increase of $15.0 million to the budget request. That increase would include $12.0 million to restore the schedule for integration of the improved extended echo ranging (IEER) and the anti-surface warfare improvement program (AIP) capabilities in the P–3, and $3.0 million for upgrade of P–3 stores management, to permit integration of advanced weapons systems. In relation to the fiscal year 1995 budget projections for fiscal year 1996, the House report (H. Rept. 104–131) noted that sharp funding reductions in the P-3 modernization program would result in an overall program cost increase and multi-year delays in fielding capability improvements needed to offset decreases in MPA force structure. The House report also expressed the House's expectation that the Navy's future budget requests would include the increased funding necessary to complete the IEER and AIP capabilities integration in the P-3, the P-3 stores management upgrades, and procurement of sufficient quantities of the AIP and update III kits to appropriately outfit the active and reserve MPA force.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The Senate recedes.

Air crew systems development

The budget request included $9.8 million in PE 64264N for the development of aviation life support systems for air crews.

The House bill would authorize an increase of $7.9 million to transition the Navy's Day/Night/All Weather Helmet Mounted Display to operational evaluation in F/A-18 and AV-8B aircraft, to upgrade current escape systems, and to develop crashworthy troop seats in the H-1, H-3 and H-46 helicopters.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The Senate recedes.

AEGIS combat systems engineering

The budget request included $105.9 million in PE 64307N, including $90.0 million for continued development of improvements in the AEGIS combat system.

The House bill would authorize $89.9 million, a reduction of $15.8 million from the requested amount. In support of the funding reduction, the House report (H. Rept. 104-131) cited the deferred release of fiscal year 1995 funds, which led to a corresponding, but unnecessary, increase in the Navy's budget request. The House report (H. Rept. 104-131) also expressed concern about the Navy's revised strategy for development of the AEGIS baseline 6.

The Senate amendment would authorize the requested amount.

The conferees agree to a reduction of $11.0 million in PE 64307N for AEGIS combat systems engineering. The conferees note that the Navy included the $11.0 million in its budget request in anticipation of losing $15.8 million of fiscal year 1995 funds through the omnibus reprogramming process. The use of these fiscal year 1995 funds as a reprogramming source has been specifically denied by Congress. The conferees direct the Office of the Secretary of Defense to return these funds to the Navy without delay to permit orderly execution of the AEGIS program. Further, the navy should review its program for development of the AEGIS baseline 6 with a view to minimizing concurrency.

Enhanced modular signal processor

The budget request included $8.3 million in PE 64507N for development and risk mitigation testing of the AN/UYS-2 enhanced modular signal processor (EMSP) and software development, integration, testing, and critical engineering design support in the airborne low-frequency sonar (ALFS), surveillance towed array sensor system (SURTASS), AN/SQQ-89 surface combat system, and AN/BSY-2 submarine combat system.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The conferees understand that the Navy is considering development of a commercial-off-the-shelf (COTS) variant of the EMSP, as discussed in the House report (H. Rept. 104-131). The conferees authorize an increase of $6.5 million in PE 64507N for development of this COTS variant. The conferees encourage the Navy to include additional funds that may be required to complete the EMSP COTS development in its fiscal year 1997 budget request.

Submarine combat system

The budget request included $42.3 million in PE 64524N for development of the AN/BSY-2 submarine combat system.

The House bill would reduce the authorization by $6.2 million, the amount requested for delivery of the AN/BSY-2 system for the SSN-23.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The House recedes.

Submarine tactical warfare system

The budget request included $38.5 million in PE 64562N for continued development of improvements in SSN combat control systems.

The House bill recommended a reduction of $18.0 million to the budget request.

The Senate amendment would authorize the requested amount.

The House recedes.

Advanced tactical air command central

The budget request included $8.4 million in PE 604719M to continue development of the advanced tactical air command central (ATACC) for the Marine Corps.

The House bill would reduce the PE by $5.0 million and direct that the details of the operational requirement and a revised program plan be provided with the fiscal year 1997 budget request. The house report (H. Rept. 104-131) expressed concerns regarding the marked growth in program costs for fiscal year 1996 and succeeding years, changes in the acquisition strategy, and significant revisions in the program schedule. These concerns raise questions regarding how well the operational requirement is defined and whether the system should continue in engineering and manufacturing systems development, or whether a demonstration/validation program would be more appropriate.

The Senate amendment would authorize the requested amount.

The House recedes.

The conferees agree that the concerns expressed by the House should be addressed following submission of the fiscal year 1997 defense budget request.

Ship self-defense system

SUMMARY

The budget request included $166.0 million in PE 64755N for the ship self-defense program.

The House bill would approve the budget request. The House report (H. Rept. 104-131) expressed concern that the Navy had failed to include funding in its budget request to continue development of either the infrared search and track (IRST) system or NULKA, an electronic warfare countermeasures system, despite the apparently high priority that the Navy has placed on these systems in the past. The House report argued that such funding lapses point to the absence of clearly defined program baselines in the ship self-defense programs.

The Senate amendment would authorize $184.5 million in PE 64755N, an increase of $18.5 million. It would authorize an additional $9.5 million for IRST and $9.0 million for NULKA. The Senate report (S. Rept. 104-112) also discussed evaluation of existing self-defense systems, such as the BARAK 1 missile system, for installation on active and new construction Navy ships.

The conferees agree to authorize $183.5 million for the ship self-defense program in PE 64755N. Funding increases and areas of emphasis are discussed in the following paragraphs. The conferees also agree that the year-to-year volatility of the Navy's budget requests for ship self-defense programs appear to contradict the Navy's oft stated emphasis on littoral warfare. Therefore, the conferees direct the Secretary of the Navy to provide to the congressional defense committees, as a part of the annual update of the "Ship Anti-Air Warfare (AAW) Report", an assessment of progress in establishing program baselines for the ship self-defense program and the degree to which these baselines are being met.

IRST

The budget requested reduced funding for and restructured the infrared search and track (IRST) program for affordability reasons. The conferees believe that the IRST system has the potential to play a very important role in defending naval ships against sea skimming antiship missiles. A recently completed cost and operational effectiveness analysis (COEA) supports this conclusion. The conferees agree that the Navy should emphasize early integration of the IRST system with both Aegis and non-Aegis ships, and place priority on early completion of its development. Therefore, the conferees authorize an increase of $9.5 million in PE 64755N to accelerate plans for combat system integration and design of the IRST system.

NULKA

NULKA is a joint United States/Australian project to develop an anti-ship missile decoy system. Increased funding in fiscal year 1996 would allow the Navy to integrate NULKA with the ship self-defense system (SSDS), for installation on amphibious ships and other self-defense ships, to conduct testing of the integrated system, and to commence development of improvements to the payload needed to counter improvements in anti-ship missile technology. The conferees strongly support these objectives and authorize an increase of $8.0 million in PE 64755N.

BARAK 1

The Senate report expressed concern about the need to protect Navy ships from the proliferation of maneuvering, sea-skimming, low observable, anti-ship cruise missiles. It also recognizes the fact that the Navy's evaluation of existing systems, such as the BARAK 1 missile, as candidates for the LPD-17 class's self-defense suite, could produce the most cost-effective solution to this threat. Development costs could be avoided through such an approach.

While addressing ship self-defense in some detail, the House report did not discuss this aspect of the requirement.

The conferees agree that the incorporation of weapons systems that are already in production, such as BARAK 1, into the combat systems of active or new construction ships could be a cost effective means to deal with a rapidly proliferating and evolving cruise missile threat. The conferees desire to be kept informed on the progress and results of the LPD-17 cost and operational effectiveness analysis (COEA). Furthermore, the conferees direct the Navy to present, by February 1996, a plan that could lead to testing of the BARAK 1 system in the United States during fiscal year 1996, should the LPD-17 COEA demonstrate that self-defense systems such as BARAK 1 would be cost effective.

Because of the advantage to the fleet of an early deployment of a robust ship self-defense system, the committee directs the Navy to also examine and report on BARAK 1 applicability to other ship classes. The results of this analysis should be provided to the congressional defense committees by February 1996.

Fixed distributed system—deployable

The budget request included $93.5 million in PE 64784N for the fixed distribution surveillance system (FDS), but included no funding for the deployable (FDS–D) prototype.

The House bill would add $10.0 million to the budget request to refurbish the FDS–D prototype and improve its capability to provide an interim deployable undersea surveillance, until the Advanced Deployable System becomes available.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The conferees authorize $103.5 million in PE 64784N, of which $10.0 million would be used to refurbish the FDS–D prototype and improve its surveillance capability. Further guidance is contained in the classified annex.

SSBN security and survivability program

The budget request included $25.1 million in PE 12224N for the SSBN security and survivability program.

The House bill would provide an increase of $9.5 million to the budget request. The House bill would also direct the Secretary of the Navy to provide to the congressional defense committees, within 60 days of enactment, an assessment of the potential threat to the U.S. SSBN force an analysis of the SSBN security program needed to counter that threat.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The conferees agree to authorize an additional $5.5 million in PE 12224N for the SSBN security and survivability program. The conferees agree with the House direction to the Secretary of Defense regarding the SSBN security program, contained in the House report (H. Rept. 104–131). Further guidance regarding the program is provided in the classified annex.

Cryptologic system trainer

The budget request included $7.0 million in PE 24571N to continue development and evaluation of the Navy's surface tactical team trainer.

The House bill would authorize an additional $3.0 million for:

(1) integration and evaluation of the cryptologic systems trainer in the battle force tactical training system; and

(2) the development of related information warfare/command and control warfare shipboard training systems.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The conferees authorize $10.0 million in PE 24571N. Of this amount, $3.0 million is for the purposes discussed in the House report (H. Rept. 104–131).

Optoelectronics

The budget request did not include funding for optoelectronics manufacturing.

The House bill would provide $10.0 million to initiate partnerships with industry, government laboratories and other research organizations to allow the development of manufacturing technologies that would support optoelectronics devices and components.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees agree to authorize an additional $10.0 million for this program in PE 78011N. The conferees also agree to authorize an additional $2.0 million for advanced bulk manufacturing of mercury cadmium telluride (MCT) for low cost sensors, also in PE 78011N.

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1996 contained an authorization of $12,598.4 million for Air Force, Research and Development in the Department of Defense. The House bill would authorize $13,184.1 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $13,087.4 million. The conferees recommended an authorization of $12,914.9 million. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

Defense research sciences

The budget request included $239.893 million for defense research sciences in PE 61102F.

The House bill would authorize an additional $5.0 million for adaptive optics research.

The Senate amendment would reduce the budget request by $9.0 million and authorize $5.0 million for adaptive optics research.

The conferees agree, that of the $249.5 million authorized in this program element, $5.0 million shall be authorized for adaptive optics research.

Robotics corrosion inspection system

The House bill would authorize $8.0 million in PE 62102F to conduct a competitive program to demonstrate the feasibility of non-contact robotic corrosion inspection for detection of hidden corrosion and metal fatigue.

The Senate amendment did not include such authorization.

The conferees strongly encourage the Air Force to consider environmentally benign technologies that demonstrate the potential to provide a 25 percent savings in cargo and fighter aircraft inspection and repair costs through the use of non-contact robotic corrosion inspection.

Firefighting clothing

The conferees encourage the Department of Defense to continue to make greater use of commercial off-the-shelf technologies that meet military requirements without extensive development programs. The conferees are aware of recent commercial developments in thermal absorbing materials that would have the potential to significantly increase personnel protection for fighting aircraft, ship-board, and chemical fires. Accordingly, the conferees authorize an additional $1.25 million in PE 62201F for the development of a firefighting suit that would incorporate these technologies.

Aerospace propulsion

The budget request included $3.7 million in PE 62203F for the high thermal stability and the endothermic hydrocarbon fuels project 3048.

The House bill and Senate amendment would authorize an additional $3.0 million for the acceleration of this project.

The conferees agree that of the $75.0 million authorized for this program element that $6.7 million be authorized for project 3048.

Rocket propulsion technology

The House bill would authorize an additional $13.0 million for rocket propulsion technology programs in PE 62601F, PE 63302F, and PE 62111N.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees agree to provide an additional $13.0 million, as specified in the House report (H. Rept. 104–131).

Computer security

The budget request included $98.5 million for Command, Control, and Communications in PE 62702F.

The House bill would authorize an additional $3.0 million to evaluate voice recognition computer security systems.

The Senate amendment contained no similar authorization.

The conferees direct that, of the $96.5 million authorized, $3.0 million be authorized for evaluation of voice recognition computer security systems, as specified in the House report (H. Rept. 104–131).

Aircraft ejection seats

The budget request included $19.0 million in PE 63231F for crew systems and personnel protection technology.

The House bill would authorize an additional $3.0 million to test existing Navy, Marine Corps, and Air Force front-line trainer and tactical aircraft ejection seats. Ejection seat tests would be conducted to verify predicted performance and to identify existing problems and the required corrective action.

The Senate amendment had no similar provision.

The conferees agree to authorize an additional $3.0 million in PE 63231F for the purposes specified in the House report (H. Rept. 104–131).

Micro-satellite development program

The budget request included $32.6 million in PE 63401F for Advanced Spacecraft Technology.

The Senate amendment would authorize an additional $20.0 million for a micro-satellite development program.

The House bill would authorize the budget request.

The House recedes.

The Air Force Phillips Laboratory, in conjunction with the Air Force Space Command's Space Warfare Center, has initiated a small satellite program to develop and demonstrate a variety of miniaturized space technologies. The micro-satellite program builds upon the highly successful Clementine satellite program. The conferees strongly support this effort and direct that it be placed under the control of the Space Warfare Center and be executed by the Clementine Team (Phillips Laboratory, Naval Research Laboratory, and Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory).

Intercontinental ballistic missile (ICBM) research and development and associated issues

ICBM DEMONSTRATION/VALIDATION

The budget request included $20.3 million in PE 63851F for six Minuteman-related projects.

The House bill would authorize an additional $14.5 million to complete acquisition and requirement documentation efforts and to conduct missile guidance technology experiments. The House report (H. Rept. 104–131) expressed concern that the budget request failed to include pre-milestone 0 and phase 0 funding for the command signal decoder, the modified miniature receive terminal for launch control centers, the safety enhanced reentry vehicle, and inertial measurement modifications.

The Senate amendment would authorize an additional $4.3 million to bolster the Air Force reentry vehicle applications project. The Senate report (S. Rept. 104–112) expressed concern that the reentry vehicle nose tip requirements were not adequately funded.

The conferees agree to authorize the budget request. The conferees also reiterate the concerns expressed in the House and Senate reports. The conferees understand that the Air Force is considering options to address these concerns from within their existing fiscal year 1996 budget, in particular the documentation issues identified in the House report. The conferees strongly urge the Air Force to fulfill these requirements.

ICBM ENGINEERING AND MANUFACTURING DEVELOPMENT

The budget request contained $192.7 million in PE 64851F to fund the Minuteman guidance and propulsion replacement programs.

The House bill would authorize an additional $8.0 million to fund the initial integration design and testing of the capability to integrate the Mk21 warhead on the new Minuteman guidance set. The House report (H. Rept. 104–131) endorsed using the Mk21, the safest warhead in the inventory, on the Minuteman, if and when it becomes available as a result of arms control treaties. The House report expressed concern that the current guidance replacement program fails to fund the design and testing necessary to ensure the Mk21 capability prior to initiation of the guidance set production.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The conferees agree to authorize the budget request. The conferees, however, reiterate the concerns expressed in the House report (H. Rept. 104–131), and support the recommendations made therein. The conferees are concerned that the Department of Defense and the Air Force have failed to take the necessary action to ensure that the safest nuclear warheads are compatible with the new Minuteman guidance sets. Therefore, the conferees direct that, of the funds authorized for fiscal year 1996 in PE 64851F, up to $4.0 million shall be available to initiate efforts to ensure that the new Minuteman guidance sets are capable of accommodating the Mk21 warhead. The conferees further direct the Secretary of Defense to ensure that the funds necessary to continue this effort are included in the fiscal year 1997 budget request.

REENTRY VEHICLE MATERIALS

The Senate amendment would authorize $750,000 above the budget request in PE 62102F for the Thermal Protection Materials Reentry Vehicle project to purchase, test, and evaluate three nose tip billets and related technologies.

The House bill would not authorize additional funds for reentry vehicle materials.

The Senate recedes. Nevertheless, the conferees reiterate the concerns expressed in the Senate report (S. Rept. 104–112) regarding the adequacy of the reentry vehicle applications program, and, in particular, the reentry vehicle materials program. Therefore, the conferees direct that, of the funds available in PE 62102F, up to $750,000 shall be available for the Thermal Protection Materials Reentry Vehicle project to purchase, test, and evaluate three ICBM reentry vehicle nose tip billets and related thermal technologies.

BALLISTIC MISSILE TECHNOLOGY

The budget request contained $3.1 million in PE 63311F to conduct guidance and range safety technology experiments.

The House bill would authorize an additional $5.7 million for Minuteman class range tracking and safety equipment based on Global Positioning System (GSP) equipment developments.

The Senate amendment would authorize an additional $5.0 million for suborbital flight testing conducted at White Sands Missile Range for ballistic missile guidance, range tracking, and safety equipment, based on existing GPS equipment.

The conferees agree to authorize $5.7 million above the budget request to enhance ballistic missile technology experiments and to proceed with a follow-on to the successful Missile Technology Demonstration Flight 1 (MDT–1). The conferees commend the participants in this joint effort and encourage the Air Force, the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization, the Defense Nuclear Agency, and the Phillips Laboratory to continue to pursue such joint efforts. Prior to completing plans for a MTD follow-on, the conferees direct the Air Force to consult with the Senate Committee on Armed Services and the House Committee on National Security on the issues and options associated with the following: (1) the technologies to be tested; (2) the type of booster configuration to be employed; and (3) the test range to be used.

PEACEKEEPER CONTINGENCY PLANNING

The conferees direct the Secretary of the Air Force to submit a report to the congressional defense committees, by March 1, 1996, that outlines the Air Force's current plans for retiring Peacekeeper, and maintaining the system in the interim. The report should also address the additional actions and funding that would be required to maintain the option of retaining up to 50 Peacekeeper ICBMs in an operational status beyond 2003. The report should include a timetable that outlines when such actions and funding would be needed.

Weapon impact assessment system

The conferees are aware of innovative technologies that may significantly resolve the battlefield damage assessment problems related to tactical aviation. The conferees support the priorities established in the fiscal year 1996 Department of Defense Small Business Innovative Research Program solicitation (96.1) to expeditiously pursue weapon impact assessment technology. Accordingly, the conferees authorize $950,000, distributed equally between PE 64618N and PE 64618F, for a joint Navy-Air Force flight demonstration of a weapon impact assessment system that uses a video sensor-transmitter with precision guided munitions.

Stand-off land attack missiles

The budget request contained $40.5 million in PE 64603N for continued development of the stand-off land attack missile-enhanced response (SLAM-ER) as an interim replacement for the canceled tri-service stand-off attack missile (TSSAM) for the Navy.

The House bill would authorize the budget request for SLAM-ER. However, the House report (H. Rept. 104–131) would prohibit the Navy from obligating more than $10.0 million for the program without specific approval by the congressional defense committees.

The House bill would also provide an additional $37.5 million in PE 64312N for the Navy and an additional $37.5 million in PE 27160F for the Air Force to establish a joint program for accelerated development and evaluation of candidate joint air-to-surface stand-off missile (JASSM) systems as a near-term replacement for TSSAM. The House report would direct the Secretary of Defense to establish immediately such a program and would further direct the Secretary to report to the congressional defense committees within 60 days of the enactment of the Act on:

(1) the Department's plan to address near-term Navy and Air Force requirements for an interim TSSAM replacement;

(2) the Department's plans to satisfy these near-term requirements; and

(3) the long-term plan for development of a TSSAM replacement that will satisfy the requirements of both services.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request in PE 64603N for continued development of SLAM-ER, and would provide an additional $50.0 million for the Air Force in PE 27160F to initiate a JASSM program, with the expectation that the Department of Defense would establish a joint program to meet Air Force and Navy needs for a replacement for TSSAM.

The House recedes with an amendment. The conferees agree to:

(1) authorize the SLAM-ER budget request;

(2) provide $25.0 million for JASSM in the Air Force budget; and

(3) require the Department to report on plans for meeting near-term and long-term Air Force and Navy requirements for stand-off weapons systems.

JOINT AIR-TO-SURFACE STAND-OFF MISSILE (JASSM)

In testimony before the Congress this year, the Air Force and the Navy continued to support the requirement for a survivable, precision strike stand-off weapon. The DOD decision to cancel the TSSAM program exacerbated an already significant shortfall in this capability. The conferees stress the urgent need for the operational capability that would be provided by the TSSAM, and expect the Secretary of Defense to establish a joint program in the Air Force and the Navy for development of a TSSAM replacement, as recommended in both the House report (H. Rept. 104–131) and the Senate report (S. Rept. 104–112).

The conferees are concerned about the approach the services may pursue to fulfill the JASSM requirement. The conferees note that there are a number of competing alternatives upon which the JASSM could be based. The conferees believe that JASSM could evolve from a existing, or planned interim weapons system. The conferees believe that, if the Department decides that a new weapon development is appropriate, the new development program should be based on technologies that have already been developed in the TSSAM program, or in other existing or planned stand-off weapons systems, including technologies relating to low and very low observability/stealth.

The conferees note that there are a number of competing alternatives upon which the JASSM could be based, and want to ensure that due consideration is given to all competing approaches. Therefore, the conferees direct the Department to consider the following in conducting the JASSM program: (1) the results of the TSSAM development program, and the potential for using technology and components derived from that program; and (2) the results of programs for development of other stand-off weapons systems, and the potential for using technologies derived from those programs. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to include, in his report on precision guided munitions, information on the extent to which the Department may avail itself of TSSAM-derivative components and technology, as well as, components and technologies derived from other stand-off weapons programs, in meeting the JASSM requirement.

REQUIRED REPORT

The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to include in the report on the analysis required by the provision on precision guided munitions, the Department's plan for meeting near-term Navy and Air Force requirements for an interim TSSAM replacement and the long-term plan for development of a TSSAM replacement that will meet the requirements of both services. The conferees expect that the Department would establish the following for JASSM weapons system at the next milestong: design-to-unit cost goals; minimum performance parameters; and interface requirements between JASSM and launch platforms.

Mobile missile launch detection and tracking

The conferees are aware of a proposal to use specialized processing techniques on synthetic aperture radar data to detect medium-rage ballistic missiles shortly after launch. The conferees urge the Air Force to consider this promising concept and agree to authorize the use of up to $1.0 million in funds made available in PE 28060F to demonstrate the feasibility of this concept.

Rivet joint technology transfer program

The Senate amendment recommended a $28.0 million increase to the theater missile defense program element (PE 28060F) to initiate the migration of the Cobra Ball medium wave infrared acquisition technology for the Rivet Joint RC–135 tactical reconnaissance fleet.

The House bill did not contain a similar recommendation.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees encourage the Air Force to move forward with this near term, cost effective program. With the transfer of this mature technology, the Rivet Joint fleet would offer early deployment and provide a significant improvement to the Department of Defense's capabilities in long range surveillance, warning, rapid cueing for attack operations, and impact point prediction. To achieve this goal, the conferees would consider a reprogramming in fiscal year 1996. The conferees understand that funds for the completion of this technology migration are included in the Air Force future year defense plans for this program.

Information systems security

The budget request included $11.3 million in PE 33140F for the Air Force's Information Systems Security program.

The Senate amendment would authorize an additional $1.5 million to complete research and development of the Trusted RUBIX multi-level security database management system.

The House bill would authorize the budget request.

The House recedes.

Computer-assisted technology transfer

The conferees agree to authorize $7.2 million in PE 78011F to continue the computer-assisted technology transfer program.

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1996 contained an authorization of $8.802.9 million for Defense-Wide, Research and Development in the Department of Defense. The House bill would authorize $9,287.1 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $9,271.2 million. The conferees recommended an authorization of $9,419.5 million. Unless noted explicity in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

University research initiative

The budget request included $236.2 million in PE 61103D.

The House bill would authorize an additional $20.0 million above the requested amount for the continuation of the Defense Experimental Program to Stimulate Competitive Research (DEPSCoR).

The Senate amendment would apply a general reduction of $15.0 million to the requested amount and would add $10.0 million for the acceleration of research activities at universities affecting combat readiness. The Senate amendment would also authorize $10.0 million within the authorized amount for the continuation of the DODDS Director's fund for Science, Mathematics, and Engineering.

The conferees agree to an authorization of $231.2 million in PE 61103D, of which $20.0 million shall be for the continuation of the DEPSCoR program and $10.0 million for the continuation of the DODDS Director's fund for Science, Mathematics and Engineering. The conferees also agree to authorize an additional $10.0 million for the Combat Readiness Research program described on page 169 of the Senate report (104–112) and direct that an institution awarded a contract, grant or agreement under the program be required to contribute at least three times the amount provided by the Federal government to execute the program.

Chemical-biological defense program

The budget request contained $383.5 million for the Department of Defense chemical-biological defense program, including $243.0 million for research, development, test and evaluation and $140.5 million for procurement of chemical and biological defense non-medical and medical systems.

The House bill would authorize a $57.1 million increase to the budget request for the following chemical-biological defense research and development programs: $4.6 million for PE 61384BP; $23.5 million for PE 62384BP; $12.6 million for PE 63384BP; $4.4 million for PE 63884BP; and $12.0 million for PE 64384BP. The House bill would also authorize a total of an additional $50.0 million in operations and maintenance funding for chemical defense training and chemical medical defense training in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Air Force.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The conferees agree to authorize an increase to the budget request in the following program elements: $4.6 million for PE 61384BP; $7.8 million for PE 62384BP; $10.0 million for PE 63384BP; and $1.6 million for PE 63884BP. The increased authorizations would augment and accelerate research and development in medical and non-medical chemical and biological defense. Prior to obligation or expenditure of funds authorized above the budget request, the conferees direct the Department to report on the projected use of these funds.

The conferees also agree to a $50.0 million increase in the military services operations and maintenance accounts for chemical defense training and chemical medical defense training. The conferees direct the Department to provide a report to Congress on the use of this increased funding in the Department's chemical defense training and chemical medical defense training. Additionally, the Department is directed to notify Congress 15 days in advance of obligation or expenditure of funds, and to provide a justification for the use of such funds in connection with the procurement of chemical-biological defense equipment.

Computing systems and communications technology

The budget request included $403.9 million for computing systems and communications technology in PE 62301E.

The House bill would reduce the budget request by $25.0 million. The House bill would authorize an additional $11.0 million for accelerated development of improved nuclear detection and forensic analysis capabilities.

The Senate amendment would authorize an additional $3.0 million for software reuse activities and $30.0 million in procurement for the global broadcast service.

The conferees agree to authorize $396.3 million in PE 62301E, to includg: $11.0 million for nuclear monitoring and detection; $8.0 million for global broadcast service; $7.5 million for software reuse; and a general reduction of $29.6 million.

Global broadcast service

The budget request contained no funds for global broadcast service (GBS).

The Senate amendment would authorize $30.0 million in weapons procurement, Navy, for a GBS pilot program. The Senate report (S. Rept. 104–112) endorsed insertion of this technology into the military communications master plan and the Navy's proposal to use the ultra-high frequency follow-on (UFO) satellite system as a host for an interim GBS capability.

Neither the House bill nor the House report (H. Rept. 104–131) addressed the subject.

The Senate recedes on the $30.0 million authorization in weapons procurement, Navy. The conferees, however, agree to authorize $8.0 million for fiscal year 1996 in PE 62301E to support this effort.

The conferees endorse the Senate language regarding the insertion of DBS/GBS technology into the communications master plan. The conferees, however, do not believe that the Department of Defense (DOD) has adequately evaluated all alternatives and associated issues. The conferees support proceeding swiftly with this program, but require additional information before endorsing any particular technical approach or acquisition strategy.

The conferees are aware of the time-sensitivity surrounding the Navy's proposal to use UFO satellites 8, 9, and 10 as host platforms, and that a protracted period of study and review may preclude this option (insofar as it is dependent on use of satellite 8, which is currently scheduled to be launched no later than December 1997). The conferees are also aware that the Deputy Under Secretary of Defense for Space has tentatively endorsed the UFO approach as an interim bridge to an objective GBS system.

Nonetheless, the conferees remain concerned that no detailed analysis of options and requirements has been presented to Congress. Not wanting to prematurely endorse any particular GBS option nor preclude any promising alternative, the conferees direct the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology to submit a report to the congressional defense committees that addresses the following issues regarding the development and deployment of interim and objective GBS capabilities: (1) the military requirement to be satisfied; (2) the cost, schedule, technical risk, and operational effectiveness of all hosted and free-flyer options; (3) the issues involved with the use of competitive procedures or other than competitive procedures; and (4) the role of GBS capabilities in the DOD's future military satellite communications architecture and the Department's strategy for acquiring and integrating such capabilities.

The conferees encourage early involvement by the Commanders-in-Chief (CINCs) to ensure that GBS capabilities support a broad range of joint missions in the CINCs' areas of responsibility. The conferees also believe that the Under Secretary for Acquisition and Technology should conduct a broad survey of the capabilities and views of industry prior to selecting a particular technical approach or acquisition strategy.

Once the congressional defense committees have received the report described above, the conferees would consider a reprogramming request to satisfy any outstanding fiscal year 1996 funding requirements. The conferees' approval of such a request would depend largely on the content of the report submitted, the offsets identified, and the degree to which the chosen GBS acquisition strategy is funded in the Secretary of Defense's fiscal year 1997 budget request and Future Years Defense Program.

Materials and electronics technology

The budget request included $226.1 million for material and electronics technology.

The House bill would authorize an additional $3.0 million for chemical vapor deposition (CVD) and $2.0 million for chemical vapor composite (CVC) deposition. The bill would also provide an additional $5.0 million for higher transition temperature superconducting (HTS) materials, $7.5 million for seamless high off-chip connectivity (SHOCC) and $10.0 million for non-woven aramide fiber packaging.

The Senate amendment would authorize an additional $8.0 million for CVD and $8.0 million for HTS.

The conferees agree to authorize $242.0 million in PE 62712E, an increase of $16.0 million. This increase provides $4.0 million each for CVC deposition and CVD diamond material development and $8.0 million for HTS. The HTS authorization shall include HTS wire applications and precision band pass filters and high "Q" antennae for military communication systems that operator in signal rich environments.

Counterterror technical support

The budget request included $12.0 million for the counterterror technical support program.

The House bill would authorize the budget request.

The Senate amendment would authorize an increase of $2.0 million to the budget request for the continued development of pulsed fast neutron analysis (PFNA) cargo inspection technology.

The House recedes.

Joint Department of Defense/Department of Energy munitions technology development

The budget request included $16.8 million for the joint Department of Defense and Department of Energy munitions program.

The House bill would authorize $31.8 million for the program, a $15.0 million increase to the budget request for environmentally compliant demilitarization and disposal of unserviceable, obsolete, or non-treaty compliant munitions, rocket motors, and explosives.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The conferees agree to a $5.0 million increase to the budget request for joint DOD/DOE munitions technology development (PE 63225D). In addition, the conferees agree to provide $15.0 million for explosives demilitarization technology (PE 63104D), discussed elsewhere in the report.

Experimental evaluation of major innovative technologies (EEMIT)

The budget request included $618.0 million for Experimental Evaluation of Major Innovative Technologies (EEMIT).

The Senate amendment would authorize an increase of $18.0 million for several programs, to includg: cruise missile defense ($10.0 million); thermophotovoltaics ($5.0 million); and funding for a large millimeter wave telescope ($3.0 million). The Senate would also authorize a general reduction of $10.0 million to the EEMIT program element.

The conferees agree to authorize $613.7 million in PE 63226E, the highest level of appropriation, and specifically identify the following programs for authorization: cruise missile defense ($10.0 million); large millimeter wave telescope ($3.0 million); safety and survivability ($2.0 million); ASW ($5.0 million); deep ocean relocation ($2.5 million); and Crown Royal ($5.0 million).

Safety and survivability

The House bill would authorize an additional $2.0 million in PE 65864N and an additional $2.0 million in PE 63226E for safety and survivability enhancements.

The Senate amendment contained no additional authorization for these purposes.

The conferees direct that of the funds authorized in PE 64864N and PE 63226E, $2.0 million each shall be used for safety and survivability enhancements, as specified in the House report (H. Rept. 104–131).

Shallow water anti-submarine warfare

The budget request included $16.5 million in PE 63226E for development and demonstration of advanced technologies for shallow water anti-submarine warfare operations.

The House bill would authorize an additional $7.0 million to begin an assessment by ARPA and the Navy of the use of newly developed and maturing multi-static acoustic, electromagnetic and electro-optic sensor technologies integrated into existing aircraft, ship, and submarine platforms in a combined system of sensors to provide the joint amphibious operational commander an integrated picture of the littoral maritime environment.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment. The conferees agree to authorize an additional $5.0 million to the budget request to continue the development and demonstration of advanced technologies for shallow water anti-submarine warfare.

Synthetic theater of war

The budget request included $79.1 million in PE 63226E for the Advanced Distributed Simulation program.

The House bill would authorize an additional $6.8 million to maintain the program and schedule for the 1997 Synthetic Theater of War (STOW–97) advanced concept technology demonstration.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The House recedes. The conferees are impressed by the results of the STOW–95 demonstration and the potential to meet the warfighting commanders' requirements for development and integration of improved simulation technologies for training and mission rehearsal. The conferees recognize that the STOW program could prove to be the foundation for the future Joint Simulations System for all the military services. The conferees strongly encourage the Secretary of Defense to maintain funding levels necessary to sustain the objectives and schedule of the STOW–97 advanced concept technology demonstration.

Tactical technology

The budget request included $113.2 million for this tactical technology program.

The House bill would authorize an additional $7.0 million for the tactical landing system project and an additional $7.0 million for a high resolution, mobile multiple object tracking system project.

The Senate amendment would authorize an additional $6.5 million for the tactical landing system project.

The conferees agree to authorize an additional $6.5 million in PE 63226E for completion of the tactical landing system project and an additional $7.0 million in PE 63226E for a high resolution, mobile multiple object tracking system.

Advanced submarine technology development

The budget request included $7.5 million in PE 63569E for the Advanced Research Projects Agency's (ARPA's) advanced submarine technology program.

The House bill would authorize an additional $23.0 million in PE 63569E. This increase would permit ARPA to pursue innovative technologies that could improve the capability of Navy submarines to operate in littoral regions, develop and demonstrate new concepts for structural acoustics and management of submarine signatures, and enhance the multi-mission capabilities of Navy submarines.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The conferees agree to authorize $30.5 million in PE 63569E, an increase of $23.0 million. Of the $23.0 million, $7.0 million shall only be available to continue transfer of technology to the Navy for active control of machinery platforms demonstrated in ARPA's Project M.

Rapid acquisition of manufactured parts

The House bill would authorize an increase of $12.0 million above the requested amount of $21.5 million in PE 63712N for the continuation of the rapid acquisition of manufactured parts (RAMP) program.

The Senate amendment would authorize an increase of $12.0 million above the requested amount of $6.5 million in PE 63736D for the RAMP program.

The House recedes.

Advanced lithography program

The budget request included $39.0 million in PE 63739E for advanced lithography programs.

The House bill would authorize an additional $25.0 million in PE 63739E for advanced lithography programs.

The Senate amendment would authorize the requested amount.

The conferees agree to authorize $6.0 million, an additional $21.0 million, in PE 63739E, for advanced lithography programs.

Advanced electronics technologies

The budget request included $420.0 million for advanced electronics technologies in PE 63739E.

The House bill would authorize an additional $25.0 million for advanced lithography and a reduction of $23.6 million in project MT–07.

The Senate amendment reduced the budget request by a cumulative $50.0 million for three separate programs.

The conferees agree to a funding level of $409.0 million, which includes an additional $21.0 million for advanced lithography, $7.5 million for seamless high off-chip connectivity, and full funding for project MT–08. The conferees consider the work of the Center for Advanced Technologies to be worthy of continuation. The conferees note that the Department of Defense may, at its discretion, use funds authorized in PE 61101E to continue the program at the requested level.

Joint robotics program

The budget request included $17.4 million for the joint robotics program.

The House bill would authorize an additional $10.0 million for the mobile detection assessment response system (MDARS).

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees agree to an increased funding authorization of $5.0 million for MDARS in PE 63709D.

Advanced sensor applications program

The budget request included $17.4 million in PE 63714D for the advanced sensor applications program.

The House bill would authorize an increase of $10.0 million to the budget request, including $5.0 million for continued development of a research prototype laser radar anti-submarine warfare (LIDAR ASW) system concept, which is being investigated by the Office of the Secretary of Defense advanced sensor applications program (OSD ASAP), and $5.0 million for continued development of the Navy ATD–111 LIDAR ASW system. The House bill would encourage comparative testing of the two systems as a basis for establishing the requirement for a follow-on system.

The Senate amendment would authorize an additional $10.0 million for upgrade test and evaluation of the ATD–111 system, and would direct the Secretary of the Navy to prepare a plan for acquisition and deployment of the ATD–111.

The conferees have agreed to provide $10.0 million in PE 63528N for the Navy ATD–111 non-acoustic anti-submarine warfare program, as discussed elsewhere in this statement of managers. The conferees strongly support the comparative evaluation of the LIDAR ASW alternatives, and direct the Department of the Navy and the OSD ASAP to develop jointly a plan for testing these two alternative approaches to LIDAR ASW. The conferees expect that funds to complete the evaluation will be included in the fiscal year 1997 defense budget request.

Industrial preparedness (manufacturing technology) programs

The budget request included $17.8 million for the Army, $41.2 million for the Navy, $53.3 million for the Air Force, and $7.0 million for the Defense Agencies to fund the manufacturing technology (MANTECH) programs within these agencies.

The House bill would include an additional $10.0 million for the Army, an additional $10.0 million for the Navy, and approve the requested amount for the Air Force and the Defense. The House bill would also transfer funding from advanced development (6.3) program elements to industrial preparedness (7.8) program elements.

The Senate amendment would authorize all the manufacturing technology programs at the requested amounts and would transfer the funding from the program elements in the budget request.

The conferees agree to authorize funding for manufacturing technology programs, as follows:

	Millions
Army (PE 78045A)	$26.8
Navy (PE 78011N)	88.0
Air Force (PE 78011F)	60.9
Def. Ag. (PE 78011S)	7.0

Integrated bridge system for MK V special operations craft

The budget request included $13.3 million in PE 1160402BB for special operations advanced technology development.

The House bill would authorize an additional $1.5 million for development of a prototype maritime integrated bridge system for the MK V special operations craft to demonstrate the potential for advanced display and control technologies to enhance mission performance.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The Senate recedes.

Quiet Knight advanced concept and technology demonstration

The budget request included $101.6 million in PE 116040BB for Special Operations tactical systems development, to include $3.5 million allocated by the U.S. Special Operations Command to continue the Quiet Knight advanced avionics technology demonstration.

The House bill would authorize the budget request. The House report (H. Rept. 104–131) expressed strong support for a Phase I (component development and demonstration) of an advanced concept technology demonstration of Quiet Knight for both fixed and rotary wing aircraft, and the continuation to a Phase II full scale demonstration and flight test of the integrated Quiet Knight capability. The House report also expressed the expectation that funding requirements for completion of the Phase II demonstration would be included in the fiscal year 1997 budget request.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The conferees support completion of the Quiet Knight technology demonstration, and encourage the Department of Defense to validate the requirements for advanced low probability of intercept/low probability of detection avionics for special operations aircraft.

Advanced SEAL delivery system

The budget request included $24.6 million in PE 1160404BB to complete fabrication and integration of the first Advanced SEAL Delivery System (ASDS) and begin system level testing.

The House bill would authorize an additional $4.0 million to complete evaluation of the ASDS employed on the SSN–688 class submarine.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision.

The conferees are pleased with the joint efforts of the U.S. Special Operations Command and the Navy in the development of ASDS. The conferees agree to increase the budget request by $4.0 million to complete evaluation of the ASDS.

Rigid hull inflatable boat

The budget request contained $11.7 million for procurement of special warfare equipment, including $10.1 million for procurement of the Naval Special Warfare 10 meter Rigid Hull Inflatable Boat (RHIB).

The House bill would authorize the budget request.

The Senate amendment noted that the U.S. Special Operations Command had reported that the 10 meter RHIB, on which initial developmental effort had been focused, performed unsatisfactorily during operational testing. As a result, a new strategy was adopted for development of a RHIB to meet Special Operations Forces' requirements. The Senate amendment would authorize an increase of $4.3 million in PE 1160404BB to support this developmental effort and would direct a corresponding reduction in the procurement account for special warfare equipment to offset the increase.

The House recedes. The conferees understand that the $4.3 million increase in PE 1160404BB for this purpose will support the competitive procurement of three to four prototype RHIBs for developmental testing and early operational assessment. The remaining $5.8 million authorized for procurement of special warfare RHIBs will be used to procure approximately 30 interim 24-foot RHIBs to alleviate deficiencies caused by the estimated three-year delay in initial operation capability for the new RHIBs.

Ballistic missile defense funding and programmatic guidance

The budget request contained $2,912.9 million for the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization (BMDO), including $2,442.2 million for Research, Development, Test, and Evaluation (RDT&E), $453.7 million for Procurement, and $17.0 million for Military Construction.

The House bill would authorize an additional $628.0 million for BMDO.

The Senate amendment would authorize an additional $490.5 million for BMDO.

The conferees agree to authorize a total of $3,516.9 million for BMDO, an increase of $603.9 million for BMDO, an increase of $603.9 million above the budget request. The conferees set forth funding allocations and programmatic guidance below.

Theater High Altitude Area Defense (THAAD)—The conferees agree to authorize the budget request of $576.3 million in PE 63861C for THAAD Demonstration/Validation (Dem/Val).

The conferees endorse the language in the House report (H. Rept. 104–131) and the Senate report (S. Rept. 104–112) regarding the THAAD User Operational Evaluation System (UOES) option, and the need to ensure a smooth and timely transition from the Dem/Val phase to the Engineering and Manufacturing Development (EMD) phase. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to restructure the THAAD program so as to achieve a First Unit Equipped (FUE) by fiscal year 2000. The conferees believe that this objective can be facilitated by making only minor modifications to the UOES design and beginning Low-Rate Initial Production as soon as the EMD missiles have been adequately tested. Subsequent performance improvements to the initial system configuration should be incorporated through block upgrades, as appropriate and necessary. The conferees note that this approach would reduce overall THAAD development costs while significantly accelerating fielding of an operational system. Therefore, the conferees urge the Secretary of Defense to release the THAAD engineering and manufacturing development (EMD) request for proposal. Finally, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to promptly initiate development of all battle management software for the THADD system, including that necessary to receive cuing information from external sensors.

Navy Upper Tier—The budget request included $30.4 million in PE 63868C for the Navy Upper Tier program.

The conferees agree to authorize an increase of $170.0 million for a total Navy Upper Tier authorization of $200.4 million. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to include the Navy Upper Tier program in the core theater missile defense (TMD) program and to structure the Navy Upper Tier development and acquisition program so as to achieve an initial operational capability (IOC) not later than fiscal year 2001, with a UOES capability not later than fiscal year 1999. The conferees look forward to receiving the results of the various studies that are assessing Navy Upper Tier technical issues and deployment options. The conferees agree to require the Director of BMDO to provide a status report to the congressional defense committees, not later than March 1, 1996, that summarizes the findings and recommendations (as available) of these analyses. The Director of BMDO should include in such report an assessment of options for reducing risk and enhancing competition in the Navy Upper Tier program, including the option of establishing a competitive development and flight test program between the Lightweight Exoatomospheric Projectile (LEAP) and THAAD kill vehicles.

The conferees believe that competition within the Navy Upper Tier program is desirable, but do not support the notion of competition between the Navy Upper Tier and THAAD programs. The conferees are convinced that the United States can and should develop and deploy both sea-based and land-based upper tier programs. Although there may be an opportunity to reduce the number of TMD programs being developed by the Department of Defense, the conferees strongly oppose the notion of a competition and down-select between the THAAD and Navy Upper Tier systems. The conferees view these as critical and complementary systems.

Patriot—The budget request included $247.9 in PE 64865C for PAC–3 EMD, $19.5 million in PE 64866C for PAC–3 risk reduction, and $399.5 million for Patriot procurement.

The conferees agree to authorize the overall amount requested for the Patriot program and related activities. Within this overall authorization, the conferees agree to transfer $104.5 million from Patriot procurement to PAC–3 EMD, a total authorization of $352.4 million in PE 64865C.

Navy Lower Tier—The budget request included $237.5 million in PE 64867C for Navy Lower Tier EMD and $16.9 million for Navy Lower Tier procurement.

The conferees agree to authorize an increase of $45.0 million for Navy Lower Tier Dem/Val and to transfer $140.0 million from Navy Lower Tier EMD to Navy Lower Tier Dem/Val, a total of $185.0 million in PE 63867C.

Corps SAM—The budget request included $30.4 million in PE 63869C for the Corps Surface to Air Missile (Corps SAM) system.

The conferees agree to authorize $20.4 million for Corps SAM, a reduction of $10.0 million. Although the conferees support the Corps SAM requirement, they remain concerned by several aspects of the current Corps SAM program, now known as the medium extended air defense system (MEADS). The conferees support an effort to explore alternative means to satisfy the Corps SAM requirement. Given the investments that have already been made in developing systems such as PAC–3 and THAAD, reintegration of existing systems and technologies may offer an achievable, cost-effective, and expeditious alternative. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to submit a report to the congressional defense committees on the options associated with the use of existing systems, technologies, and program management mechanisms to satisfy the Corps SAM requirement, including an assessment of cost and schedule implications. The conferees direct that, of the funds authorized in fiscal year 1996 for the Corps SAM program, not more than $15.0 million may be obligated until such report has been submitted to the congressional defense committees.

Boost-Phase Intercept—The budget request included $49.1 million in PE 63870C for the kinetic energy Boost-Phase Intercept (BPI) program.

The House bill would authorize $29.1 million for the kinetic BPI program.

The Senate amendment would authorize no funds for the kinetic BPI program in PE 63870C. However, the Senate amendment would authorize $15.0 million in the Other TMD (OTMD) program element (PE 63872C) to initiate a joint United States-Israel BPI program based on unmanned aerial vehicles (UAVs).

The conferees agree to authorize no funds for the kinetic BPI program due to continuing skepticism about the operational and technical effectiveness of a BPI system based on a manned tactical aircraft. However, the conferees agree to authorize the use of up to $15.0 million, from within funds made available in the OTMD program element, for a UAV-based BPI program. The conferees support a joint U.S.-Israel UAV-BPI program focused on risk mitigation, provided that an equitable cost-sharing arrangement can be reached and that the program will be structured to satisfy the BPI requirements of both sides. The conferees also support continuation of the Atmospheric Interceptor Technology (AIT) program, which is being developed as an advanced multi-purpose kill vehicle. The conferees authorize the use of up to $30.0 million, from within funds made available in the OTMD program element, to continue the AIT program. The conferees are disappointed that the Department has not completed its review of BPI programs and options in time to inform the conferees' deliberations and decisions. Therefore, the conferees agree to require the Director of BMDO to submit a report to the congressional defense committees, not later than February 1, 1996, that summarizes the findings and recommendations of the Department's BPI study. This report should also address promising options and technical approaches associated with a UAV BPI program.

Other TMD—The budget request contained $460.5 million in PE 63872C for OTMD programs, projects, and activities.

The House bill would authorize $423.5 million for OTMD.

The Senate amendment would authorize $475.5 million, including the $15.0 million for the UAV-BPI program cited above.

The conferees agree to authorize $438.5 million for OTMD. Of this amount, the conferees authorize the use of up to $15.0 million to explore a UAV–BPI program and up to $30.0 million to continue the AIT advanced kill vehicle program.

National Missile Defense—The budget request contained $370.6 million in PE 63871C for National Missile Defense (NMD).

The House bill would authorize $820.6 million for NMD.

The Senate amendment would authorize $670.6 million for NMD.

The conferees agree to authorize $820.6 million for NMD. The conferees provide detailed programmatic guidance on NMD elsewhere in this Statement of Managers.

Support Technologies—The budget request contained $93.3 million in PE 62173C and $79.4 million in PE 63173C for ballistic missile defense (BMD) support technologies.

The House bill would authorize the budget request for BMD Support Technologies.

The Senate amendment would authorize an increase of $70.0 million in PE 63173C for the Space-Based Laser (SBL) program.

The conferees agree to authorize the budget request in PE 62173C and to authorize an increase in the SBL program of $50.0 million, for a total authorization of $129.4 million in PE 63173C. The conferees believe that it is critical for the United States to continue developing the technology for space-based defenses, to preserve the option of deploying highly effective global defenses in the future. The conferees note that a space-based laser would likely be the most effective system for intercepting ballistic missiles of virtually all ranges in the boost phase. Therefore, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to take the following actions: (1) continue integration and testing of the laser, mirror, and beam control components of the Alpha-Lamp Integration program; (2) accelerate design activities on the StarLITE space demonstration configuration; (3) produce the concept of operations and design requirements for a follow-on operational space-based laser deployment; and (4) revitalize the technology development efforts most likely to yield significant cost and weight savings for a future SBL spacecraft. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to ensure that sufficient funds are provided in the outyears for continuation of a robust SBL effort, and submit to the congressional defense committees, by March 1, 1996, a report that outlines a program and funding profile that could lead to an on-orbit test of a demonstration system by the end of 1999 if approved.

The conferees note that the Director, BMDO, has testified to Congress that BMDO's follow-on technology programs are severely under-funded and that the Director is seeking to increase such funding to approximately 12 percent of the overall BMDO budget. The conferees support the efforts of the Director of BMDO to increase funding for advanced technology development. However, the conferees note that such increases will require an overall increase in the funds allocated to BMDO. The conferees support such an increase in order to reinvigorate and advanced technology programs and to help sustain the development and acquisition activities endorsed by the conferees.

BMDO is required to set aside 2.15 percent of extramural research, development, test, and evaluation authorized and appropriated (RDT&E) funds for Small Business Innovative Research (SBIR) efforts. Since the conferees recommend a level of funding for BMD programs exceeding the budget request, and programmed funding for SBIR represents a level below the mandated percentage, the Director of BMDO is authorized to transfer such funds as necessary from BMD program elements into PE 62173C to achieve the required percentage for SBIR.

BMDO Management—The budget request contained $185.5 million in PE 65218C for BMD Management.

The House bill would authorize $165.5 million for BMDO Management.

The Senate amendment would authorize $155.5 million for BMDO Management.

The conferees agree to authorize $155.5 million for BMDO Management. The conferees recognize that BMDO must maintain the integrity of its oversight of the overall BMD program. The conferees are concerned, however, that BMD management infrastructure may be unnecessarily duplicated in one or more of the services. Therefore, the conferees direct that BMDO identify any such duplication and take actions to eliminate it. The conferees request that the Director of BMDO consult with the Senate Committee on Armed Services and the House Committee on National Security regarding the Director's findings and proposed actions. The conferees further direct that BMDO show no increase in fiscal year 1997, after adjustments for inflation and any change in mission, over the level appropriated for management in fiscal year 1996.

Cruise missile defense funding

The House bill would authorize an increase of $76.0 million above the budget request for cruise missile defense programs, projects, and activities.

The Senate amendment would authorize an increase of $145.0 million above the budget request for a similar group of programs, projects, and activities.

The conferees agree to authorize an increase of $85.0 million above the budget request for cruise missile defense programs, projects, and activities. The conferees provide additional guidance in the classified annex.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Anti-submarine warfare program

The conferees share the concerns raised in the House report (H. Rept. 104-131), and in the classified annex to that report, regarding the apparent decline in priority of the Navy's anti-submarine warfare (ASW) program. The conferees agree that there is a need for an assessment of the nation's overall ASW program. The conferees' concerns are addressed further in the classified annex to this Statement of Managers.

The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to assess the current and projected United States ASW capability in light of the continuing development of quieter nuclear submarines, the proliferation of very capable diesel submarines, the sale of sophisticated, submarine launched weapons, and the declining trend in budget resources associated with ASW programs. This assessment should identify both short-term and long-term improvements that are needed to cope with the evolving submarine threat in both littoral and open ocean areas. The results of this assessment and the plan for the United States ASW program shall be reported to the congressional defense committees by July 1, 1996.

Geosat follow-on program

The House report (H. Rept. 104-131) addressed the issue of converging the Navy's Geosat Follow-On (GFO) altimetry program with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's TOPEX/Poseidon Follow-On (TPFO) altimetry program.

The Senate report (S. Rept. 104-112) did not address the issue.

The conferees share the concerns raised in the House report. The conferees are dismayed that the report to Congress on altimetry convergence was submitted more than three months later than an already extended deadline. The conferees are also troubled that the report recommends proceeding with the TPFO option, despite the fact that this approach would cost more, not involve U.S. construction and control of the satellite, and not provide the same level of data security. The TPFO option would require the Navy to spend an additional $5.2 million, for which it has not budgeted, to add global positioning system (GPS) and direct downlink capabilities critical for satisfying Navy requirements. The conferees direct that no funds authorized for the Department of Defense be obligated or expended during fiscal year 1996 for activities associated with adding GPS and direct downlink capabilities to TPFO.

High performance computing modernization program

In addition to supporting efforts to reduce the RDT&E infrastructure, the conferees continue to support investment in high performance computing (HPC) resources for use in the developmental test and evaluation (DT&E) community and recognize the need for a transition to HPC-based resources, integrated DT&E, and operational test and evaluation (OT&E). The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to prepare a long-term plan for modernization of HPC resources at test and evaluation centers, and for the integration of HPC-based models, advanced data bases, and other decision support resources into the RDT&E infrastructure. In preparing the plan, the Secretary should rely on the collaborative input from the Director of Defense Research and Engineering, the Director of Test Systems Engineering and Evaluation, and the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation. The plan shall address budgeting options that provide for a realistic program and propose financing methods that can insure that needed infrastructure investments are made in a timely manner. The conferees direct the Secretary to submit the proposed plan with the Department of Defense budget recommendations to the congressional defense committees, no later than March 31, 1996.

Low-low frequency acoustics

The conferees share the understanding expressed in the House report (H. Rept. 104-131) that of the funds authorized and appropriated in fiscal year 1994 and 1995 for the low-low frequency acoustics (LLFA) technology program approximately $30.0 million remain available and are sufficient to continue the program through fiscal year 1996. The conferees further understand that the fiscal year 1996 program will focus on operational concepts for the LLFA, technical performance, command and control, environmental considerations, and the transition of the LLFA technology to existing fleet platforms. The conferees agree with the House that based on the emerging results of the fiscal year 1996 program consideration of additional funding for LLFA technology program, should be deferred until the fiscal year 1997 budget request.

Machine tool controller

The conferees are aware of a recent cooperative research and development agreement, entered into by the Department of Energy, two national laboratories, and a private sector consortium, to develop and test an open-architecture machine tool controller. The conferees encourage the Secretary of Defense to develop a plan to ensure a thorough evaluation of the technology and its application to the specific needs of defense contractors.

National security space policy, management, and oversight

The House report (H. Rept. 104-131) and the Senate report (S. Rept. 104-112) each contained reporting requirements concerning policy, management, and oversight of U.S. national security space programs. In lieu of the reporting requirements contained in those reports, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to submit a report to the Congress, not later than April 15, 1996, that addresses in detail the following matters:

(1) The results of the Administration's reviews of U.S. national and military space policies—The conferees direct that copies of any updated policy directives (including unclassified and classified forms) that result from the reviews be included as attachments to the Secretary's report. The conferees view the Administration's decision to initiate such reviews as appropriate in light of changes in the international security environment, and expect the reviews will be completed in time to permit Departmental witnesses to discuss the results in hearings on the President's fiscal year 1997 budget request.

(2) The activities of the Joint Department of Defense Intelligence Community Space Management Board (JSMB)—The report shall include a copy of the charter for the Board and a description of its planned functions, operations, and staffing. The report shall address the responsibilities for the development of an integrated national security space architecture and the integrated acquisition of national security space systems. In addition, the report shall describe the Board's plans for reviewing military and intelligence satellite communications architectures and systems. The conferees endorse the establishment of the JSMB, noting that improved integration of military and intelligence satellite architectures and systems can result in significant cost-savings and efficiencies in the acquisition and operation of those systems.

(3) The status of and plans for completing a national security space master plan to guide investments in military and intelligence space architectures and systems for the coming decade—The conferees note with concern that the Department failed in a similar, but more narrowly focused, undertaking when, in the Statement of Managers to accompany the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 (H. Rept. 102-966), the conferees directed the Department to develop "a comprehensive acquisition strategy for developing, field, and operating DOD space programs." Nonetheless, the conferees applaud the decision of the Deputy Under Secretary of Defense for Space to begin drafting such a master plan, and request that the report include an estimated completion date for the plan.

(4) The Department's plans for ensuring that, even as oversight of national security space acquisition and planning is centralized, each of the military services is able to influence decisions regarding space architectures and systems—The conferees direct that the report includg: (a) an assessment of progress to date in centralizing DOD space management; (b) the organizational structure that will be achieved upon completion of the planned consolidation, and an estimated completion date for such consolidation; (c) a description of how the DOD plans to protect service-unique interests and other equities in the new centralized organization; (d) the anticipated reductions in personnel and infrastructure that will result from such consolidation; and (e) the degree to which effectiveness and efficiency will be enhanced by the new structure and associated procedures.

The conferees are aware that the Department has established a Space Architect Office as part of the space management reorganization. Given that this is a new function and organization, budget planning was not completed prior to submittal of the amended fiscal year 1996 budget request. Therefore, the conferees agree to authorize the use of up to $10.0 million in Air Force research, development, test, and evaluation funds to operate the Space Architect Office in fiscal year 1996.

Shortstop

The conferees stress the need to move forward without delay on the Shortstop countermeasure system, and encourage the Secretary of the Army to maintain funding for the currently planned program leading to procurement.

Softwar operations

The conferees direct the Air Force's Phillips Laboratory Combat Space Operations

Program Office to examine the use of commercially developed Information Warfare Systems that use television enhanced situational awareness for "softwar" operations. The Secretary of the Air Force shall report to the congressional defense committees by January 1, 1996 on the results of the Phillips Laboratory examination and the possibility to fund a technology demonstration in "softwar" operations. The conferees direct the Secretary to pursue this technology if the examination results in a favorable recommendation.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

SUBTITLE A—AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

Modifications to strategic environmental research and development program (sec. 203)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 203) that would make certain modifications to chapter 172 of title 10, United States Code, which governs the Strategic Environmental Research and Development Program.

Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would streamline and simplify program activities, facilitate program management, and promote cost effectiveness. The existing annual reporting requirement would continue until fiscal year 1997, at which point an abbreviated annual reporting requirement would become effective. The Senate amendment would ensure that the level of participation by the Secretary of Energy would not be subject to change. The conferees agree that there is a continuing need for Department of Energy participation in the program, and the retention of some reporting requirements.

Defense dual-use technology initiative (sec. 204)

The House bill would deny the entire funding request of $500.0 million for the Defense Reinvestment Program (PE 63570E).

The Senate amendment would rename the program the Defense Dual-Use Technology Initiative and reduce the requested authorization for the program by $262.0 million.

The conferees agree to change the name of the program and to authorize $195.0 million for the program. The conferees have included a provision that would limit the availability of the funds authorized in PE 63570E only for the purpose of continuation or completion of projects initiated before October 1, 1995. The conferees have also included language that would require the Secretary of Defense, prior to obligation of funds, to provide the congressional defense committees with notice regarding the projects to be funded with $145.0 million of the amount authorized for the program. The conferees have also required that, for the remaining $50.0 million of the total amount authorized, the Secretary should certify, prior to obligation of funds, that the projects that would be carried out using such funds have been determined by the Joint Requirements Oversight Council to be of significant military priority.

Subtitle B—Program Requirements, Restrictions, and Limitations

Space launch modernization (sec. 211)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 211) that would authorize $100.0 million for a competitive reusable rocket technology program, and $7.5 million for evaluation of prototype hardware of low-cost expendable launch vehicles.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would authorize $50.0 million for a competitive reusable rocket technology programs, provided that the National Aeronautics and Space Administration allocates at least an equal amount for its reusable space launch program.

Tactical manned reconnaissance (sec. 212)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 213) that would prohibit the Air Force from conducting any research and development on tactical manned reconnaissance systems.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require a report explaining the Air Force's planned uses of funds for the tactical manned reconnaissance mission.

Joint advanced strike technology (JAST) program (sec. 213)

The budget request included three requests for research and development funding for the joint advanced strike technology (JAST) program: $149.3 million for the Navy, 151.2 million for the Air Force, and $30.7 million for the Advanced Research Projects Agency.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 216) that would reduce the request for JAST by $51.0 million, evenly divided between the Navy and the Air Force, and limit to 75 percent the obligation of fiscal year 1996 appropriations until the Secretary of Defense provides a report to the congressional defense committees. The provision would require that the Secretary's report specify the numbers and capabilities of JAST-derivative aircraft and related weapons systems necessary to support two major regional contingencies.

The Senate amendment would approve the JAST request. The Senate amendment also contained a provision (sec. 211) that would require the Navy to evaluate a variant of the F-117 stealth fighter to fulfill Navy requirements within the JAST program. The Senate amendment would add $175.0 million to the Navy program for this propose, with $25.0 million to provide initial engineering analysis and specific risk reduction efforts, and $150.0 million to develop a flying prototype. Authorization of a flying prototype would be contingent on approval by the Secretary of the Navy's approval of results of initial analytical efforts.

The Senate report (S. Rept. 104-112) questioned whether the program could fulfill the needs of the three services, and directed the Department to include two separate approaches in the JAST program to reduce program risk. The Senate amendment directed the Secretary of the Navy to:

(1) ensure that the JAST program leads to competitive demonstration involving tests of full scale, full thrust aircraft by competitors to provide test data for evaluation by the services; and

(2) evaluate at least two propulsion concepts from competing engine companies as part of those demonstrations.

Subsequent to passage of the Senate amendment and the House bill, the Department redefined the JAST program. Although additional resources will be necessary, from fiscal year 1997 onward, to execute this new program, these changes have led to fiscal year 1996 deferral of $131.0 million.

The conferees share the concerns expressed in the Senate report (S. Rept. 104-112) regarding the lack of engine competition and the size of flying prototypes. The conferees direct the Under Secretary of Defense (Acquisition & Technology) (USD (A&T)) to ensure that: (1) the Department's JAST program plan provides for adequate engine competition in the program; and (2) the scale of the proposed demonstrator aircraft is consistent with both adequately demonstrating JAST concepts and lowering the risk of entering engineering and manufacturing development (EMD). The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to include in the report required by section 213(d) the Department's plan for competitive engine programs and demonstrator aircraft.

The conferees recommend authorization of funds reflecting these changes, and agree to a provision (sec. 213) that would:

(1) require that the Secretary of Defense provide a report to the congressional defense committees specifying thg:

(a) the numbers and capabilities of JAST-derivative aircraft and related weapons systems required to support two major regional contingencies; and

(b) the department's plan for competitive engine programs and demonstrator aircraft;

(2) limit obligations for the JAST program to no more than 75 per cent of fiscal year 1996 appropriations, until the Secretary of Defense provides this report;

(3) authorize up to $25.0 million from Navy Research, Development, Test and Evaluation to conduct a six month program definition phase for the A/F-117X to determine whether such an aircraft could affordably meet the Navy's next generation aircraft strike requirements;

(a) if the USD (A&T) determines that a six month definition phase is warranted, he shall provide a report on the results of the concept definition phase to the congressional defense committees, not later than May 1, 1996;

(b) if the USD (A&T) determines otherwise and certifies that an A/F-117X aircraft is not needed to meet the Navy requirements and is not a cost effective approach to meeting Navy needs, the provision would allow the Department to use the $25.0 million for other JAST activities.

(4) authorize $7.0 million for competitive engine concepts.

Continous wave, superconducting radio frequency, free electron laser (sec. 214)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 217) that would authorize $9.0 million in PE 62111N for the establishment of a continuous wave, superconducting radio frequency, free electron laser program within the Office of the Secretary of the Navy.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Navy mine countermeasure program (sec. 215)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 212) that would transfer primary responsibility for developing and testing naval mine countermeasures from the Director, Defense Research and Engineering to the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology. It would provide for the exercise of this responsibility during fiscal years 1997 through 1999.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would establish fiscal years 1996 through 1999 as the period for exercise of the responsibility.

The conferees note that section 216(b) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 1992 and 1993 (Public Law 102–190) provides that the Secretary of Defense may waive this assignment of responsibility if he annually certifies the adequacy of:

(1) the mine countermeasures master plan prepared by the Department of the Navy; and

(2) the budget resources provided for implementation of the plan.

Space-Based Infrared System (sec. 216)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 214) that would accelerate development and deployment of the Space and Missile Tracking System (SMTS), formerly known as Brilliant Eyes, and that would require the Secretary of the Air Force to obtain the concurrence of the Director of the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization (BMDO) before implementing any decision that would impact the SMTS program.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary of Defense to establish a program baseline for the overall Space-Based Infrared System (SBIRS) program. The baseline would include the following:

(1) overall program structure, including: (A) program cost and an estimate of the funds required in each fiscal year in which development and acquisition activities are planned, (B) a comprehensive schedule with program milestones and exit criteria, and (C) optimized performance parameters for each segment of the integrated system;

(2) a development schedule for SMTS structured to achieve the first launch of a Block I satellite in fiscal year 2002, and initial operational capability (IOC) of the system in fiscal year 2003;

(3) full integration of SMTS into the overall SBIRS architecture; and

(4) establishment of the performance parameters of all space segment components so as to optimize the performance of the integrated system while minimizing unnecessary redundancy and cost.

The provision adopted by the conferees would require the Secretary of Defense to provide a report to the congressional defense committees on the SBIRS program baseline not later than 60 days after the enactment of this Act.

The conference provision would also establish the following program elements for the SBIRS program:

(1) Space Segment High;
(2) Space Segment Low (SMTS); and
(3) Ground Segment.

The conference provision requires the SBIRS baseline to include an SMTS IOC by fiscal year 2003 to support national and theater missile defenses. The conferees understand that the Air Force has defined this IOC as consisting of 12–18 satellites. The conferees urge the Air Force to make every effort to achieve an 18 satellite IOC by fiscal year 2003.

In accelerating the SMTS program, it is not the conferees' intent to reduce the priority and importance of the SBIRS High components. The conferees endorse the schedule that the Air Force has established for the SBIRS High components. The SBIRS program should feature complementary and mutually supportive elements that do not include excessive technical and functional redundancy.

Although SMTS can, over time, become a multi-functional sensor system capable of fulfilling missions such as technical intelligence and battlespace characterization, the conferees direct the Air Force to ensure that the SMTS Flight Demonstration System (FDS) and Block I system be designed primarily to satisfy the missile defense mission. Missions not related to theater and/or national ballistic missile defense should not be allowed to add significant cost, weight or delay to the SMTS FDS or Block I system. This scaled-down approach will ameliorate the technical challenges associated with an accelerated schedule while contributing to overall affordability.

To support this schedule and missile defense focus, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to commence SMTS pre-engineering and manufacturing development (EMD) activities in fiscal year 1996 and to ensure that the FDS and Block I satellites are equipped with long-wave infrared sensors. The conferees endorse the design characteristics specified in the Senate report (S. Rept. 104–112) regarding the objective SMTS system. The conferees have authorized sufficient funds in fiscal year 1996 to commence these activities and to prepare the way for a fiscal year 1998 FDS launch.

Over time, as the Air Force gains operational experience with the High and Low Block I systems, it is likely that SMTS will be able to assume a much larger share of the SBIRS requirements burden. In the meantime, the conferees urge the Secretary of Defense to initiate technical and cost trade studies among the SBIRS space systems and include any preliminary findings and recommendations in the SBIRS baseline report.

The budget request for SBIRS included $130.7 million for demonstration/validation (Dem/Val), $152.2 million for EMD, and $19.9 million for procurement. Of the funds requested for Dem/Val, $114.8 million was for SMTS. The conferees agree on the following authorizations:

(1) $265.7 million in PE 63441F for SBIRS Dem/Val, of which $249.8 million is for SMTS; and

(2) $162.2 million in PE 64441F for SBIRS EMD, of which $9.4 million is for the Miniature Sensor Technology Integration (MSTI) program.

The conferees are aware of a recent proposal to increase competition and reduce risk in the SMTS program through a low-cost flight experiment. The conferees direct the Air Force and BMDO to carefully assess the merits of this concept and to include their joint findings and recommendations in the SBIRS baseline report. * * *

Defense Nuclear Agency programs (sec. 217)

The budget request contained $219.0 million for research and development at the Defense Nuclear Agency (DNA).

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 216) that would authorize $242.0 million for fiscal year 1996 for research and development programs (PE 62715H), a $23.0 million increase to the budget request. The increase would providg: $3.0 million for the establishment of a tunnel characterization/neutralization program; $6.0 million for the establishment of a long-term radiation tolerant microelectronics program and require the Secretary to report to Congress on the program and future year funding; $4.0 million for the exlectro-thermal gun program; and transfer the Air Force thermionics program and any unobligated funds to the DNA and provide $10.0 million to accelerate that program.

The House report (H. Rept. 104–131) would provide a $4.0 million increase to the budget request for the electro-thermal gun technology.

The conferees agree to a provision that would authorize $241.7 million, a $22.7 million increase above the budget request, for DNA research and development programs (PE 0602715H). Of that amount, $3.0 million shall be available for a tunnel characterization/neutralization program, $4.0 million shall be available for the electro-thermal gun technology program, $6.0 million shall be available for the establishment of a long-term radiation tolerant microelectronics program and development of long pulse, high power microwave technology; and $4.0 million shall be available for the counterterror explosives research program. Additionally, the Secretary is directed to provide a report to Congress, 120 days after enactment of this Act, on the conduct of the long-term radiation tolerant microelectronics program and future years funding for this program. The remainder of the increase should be used to supplement the tunnel characterization/neutralization program and the long-term radiation tolerant microelectronics program, as appropriate.

TUNNEL CHARACTERIZATION/NEUTRALIZATION PROGRAM

The conferees understand that the Department of Defense has allocated $10.0 million of funds requested in the budget for the counterproliferation support program for a tunnel characterization/neutralization program. Although the DNA tunnel characterization/neutralization target tests and program would be executed independently of the Department's counterproliferation efforts, the conferees expect close coordination between the two programs to ensure that common concerns are addressed. The acceleration, the conferees authorize the use of up to $40.0 million of the funds authorized for SMTS in fiscal year 1996 to begin a low-cost flight experiment.

The conferees congratulate the Air Force and BMDO for reaching agreement on the acquisition management relationship for execution of the SMTS program. In light of the Memorandum of Agreement between the Air Force Acquisition Executive and the Director of BMDO, the Senate recedes on its language dealing with management oversight of the SMTS program. As with all aspects of the SMTS program, however, the conferees will continue to monitor management oversight with great interest. If the present management structure does not fulfill the expectations of the conferees, or lead to implementation of the guidance provided above, the conferees will reconsider transferring SMTS back to BMDO.

THERMIONICS

The conferees direct the transfer of the thermionics conversion technology from the Air Force Weapons program (PE 62601F), together with all unobligated funds authorized and appropriated in prior years, totalling around $12.0 million, to the Defense Nuclear Agency program (PE 62715H).

Counterproliferation support program (sec. 218)

The budget request contained $108.2 million for the defense counterproliferation support program.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 217) that would authorize $144.5 million for the program, a $36.3 million increase to the budget request. Of the funds authorized in this section, $6.3 million would be available to the Special Operations Command (SOCOM) for purposes of broadening SOCOM's counterproliferation activities and $30.0 million would be available for the continuation of the Army tactical antisatellite technologies (ASAT) program (PE 63392A) for a user operation evaluation system (UOES) contingency capability. The provision would authorize the Department of Defense to transfer up to $50.0 million from fiscal year 1996 defense research and development accounts for counterproliferation support activities.

The House bill would authorize the budget request for the counterproliferation support program and include $11.0 million for the development of improved nuclear detection and forensics analysis by the Advanced Projects Research Agency (ARPA).

The conferees agree to a provision that would authorize $138.2 million for the counterproliferation support program, of which $30.0 million shall be available for the continuation of the Army tactical antisatellite technologies program. Of the funds authorized in fiscal year 1996, the conferees recommend that $1.5 million be available for the exploration of the "deep digger" concept for hard target characterization, and that $5.0 million be available for the high frequency active auroral research program (HAARP).

The conferees acknowledge concerns raised in the Senate report (S. Rept. 104–112) regarding the need for the Department to continue the aggressive pursuit of discriminate detection and attack capabilities of deep underground structures. The Department should continue to develop the capability to detect and defend against biological agents through the use of technologies, available through universities and non-profit industries, that have been developed for biological detection, emergency preparedness and response. The Department should also continue to develop a capability to counter technological gains by proliferant countries that could gain access to a broad mix of commercial-off-the-shelf space technologies which could provide these countries with significant space capabilities or access to space-derived data and could negatively impact a spectrum of multi-service and joint warfighting capabilities.

TACTICAL ANTISATELLITE TECHNOLOGY

The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to include sufficient resources in fiscal year 1997, and throughout the future year defense plan (FYDP), for the following: a user operation evaluation system (UOES) contingency capability to produce 10 kill vehicles with the appropriate boosters by fiscal year 1999; a review to determine the appropriate management structure and military service responsibility; report on the current status of antisatellite development worldwide and the degree to which United States antisatellite development efforts may contribute to similar development among other nations and their impact on U.S. operational capabilities; and to report the Department's recommendations to Congress in the fiscal year 1997 budget request. To avoid significant or lengthy delays in developing a needed capability, the conferees direct the Department to leverage, or build upon the current Army tactical antisatellite technology program. The conferees note that authorization of funds for continued development of the tactical antisatellite system does not constitute a decision to deploy the system.

MISSION PLANNING AND ANALYSIS

The conferees recommend that $2.5 million from Air Force operation and maintenance (O&M) be made available for Strategic Air Command (STRATCOM) mission planning and analysis. The STRATCOM program provides support to the regional commanders-in-chief (CINCs) in advance planning for counterproliferation contingencies. This program aids commanders in identifying and characterizing current and emerging proliferation threats. In instances in which proliferation activities challenge the interests of the United States and its military forces and operations, STRATCOM mission planning and analysis capabilities allow defense planners to: identify a variety of potential military targets; assess the effectiveness, consequences and costs of military options; and develop alternative contingency plans that would maximize mission effectiveness, and minimize the risks, costs, and collateral effects.

IMPROVED NUCLEAR DETECTION AND FORENSIC ANALYSIS CAPABILITIES

Due to an increase in international terrorism and attempts by criminal elements to acquire weapons-grade nuclear material, the conferees recommend $11.0 million to accelerate the development of improved nuclear detection and forensic analysis capabilities in PE 62301E, project ST23. The conferees direct the ARPA to closely coordinate its efforts in this area with the counterproliferation support program manager in the Department of Defense and the interagency group on counterproliferation.

Nonlethal Weapons Program (sec. 219)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 218) that would establish a new, consolidated program for non-lethal systems and technology. The program would be managed by the Office of Strategic and Tactical Systems of the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology. The provision would create a new program element within the defense budget for this program, and transfer funds from PE 603570D, PE 603750D, PE 603702E, and PE 603226E into this new program element.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would express congressional recognition of the U.S. armed forces increasing role in operations other than war, recognition of support for the use of nonlethal weapons and systems across the spectrum of conflict, and concern that development of these technologies is being spread across the budgets of the military services and defense agencies. The conferees direct the Department of Defense to submit a report to Congress by February 15, 1996 and direct the Secretary of Defense to assign responsibility for the nonlethal weapons program to an existing office within the Office of the Secretary of Defense or designate an executive agent from the military services, to establish centralized responsibility for development and fielding of nonlethal weapons technology. The conferees authorize $37.2 million in a new defense program element for nonlethal weapons programs and nonlethal technologies programs.

The conferees believe that centralized responsibility for the nonlethal weapons program will ensure effective program management and expeditious development, acquisition, and fielding of nonlethal weapons and systems. The conferees further understand that both the Department of the Army and the Marine Corps are the primary users of these technologies and recommend the designation of either military service as the executive agent for this important program. Further, the conferees understand that the Department of the Army and the Marine Corps have closely coordinated their efforts in this area and expect this coordination to continue to ensure centralized management and improved budgetary focus for the nonlethal weapons program. The provision would also require the Department of report to Congress by February 15, 1996 on the designation of the executive agent for oversight of the program, the acquisition plan, the time frame for fielding systems, current and anticipated military requirements, and the Department of Defense policy regarding the nonlethal weapons program.

Federally-Funded Research and Development Centers (sec. 220)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 257) that would require the Secretary of Defense and the Secretaries of the Army, Navy, and Air Force to reevaluate the functions of Federally-Funded Research and Development Centers (FFRDCs) and to achieve certain reductions, consolidations and management goals. The provision would limit FFRDC funding to $1.15 billion and reduce funding for FFRDCs and University-Affiliated Research Centers (UARC) by $90.1 million.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 219) that would require an undistributed reduction in FFRDC funding of $90.0 million, below the ceiling for fiscal year 1995, and would establish a statutory ceiling for FFRDCs of $1.2 billion in fiscal year 1996.

The Senate recedes with an amendment. The conferees agree to reduce the funding for FFRDCs and UARCs by $90.0 million in fiscal year 1996 and direct that not more than $9.0 million of this reduction be applied to funding for UARCs. The conferees have included language that would require the Secretary of Defense to manage the UARCs at the fiscal year 1995 level. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to ensure adequate funding in fiscal year 1996 for those FFRDCs that engage in studies and analysis for the Office of the Secretary of Defense and the services. The conferees also direct the Secretary to examine the possibility of increasing the use of the Software Engineering Institute in support of command, control, communications, computing, and intelligence programs managed by the Office of the Secretary of Defense.

Joint seismic program and global seismic network (sec. 221)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 224) that would authorize $9.5 million of unobligated fiscal year 1995 funds in Air Force research and development for the joint seismic program (JSP) and the global seismic network (GSN) to provide more robust monitoring research and expanded seismic monitoring of potential nuclear tests.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees agree to a provision that would authorize $9.5 million in fiscal year 1996 for the joint seismic and global seismic network programs. The conferees understand that no future year funds would be required for this program. Further, the conferees direct the Department of Defense Comptroller to release the funds in a timely manner so that the programs can be completed.

Hydra–70 rocket product improvement program (sec. 222)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 113) that would prohibit the obligation of funds to procure Hydra–70 rockets until the Secretary of the Army submitted certifications regarding: identification of causes and technical corrections of Hydra–70 rocket failures; comparative cost of correcting all Hydra–70 rockets versus the non-recurring costs of acquiring improved rockets; review and qualification of commercial, non-developmental systems to replace Hydra–70 rockets; the availability of training rockets to meet Army requirements; and the attainment of competition in future procurements of training rockets.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment.

The conferees agree to authorize up to $10.0 million for full qualification and operational platform certification of a Hydra-70 rocket with a 2.75-inch rocket motor with composite propellant, for use on the AH-64D Apache helicopter.

Limitation on obligation of funds until receipt of electronic combat consolidation master plan (sec. 223)

The conferees agree to a provision that limits the obligation of appropriations for PE 65896A, PE 65864N, PE 65807F, and PE 65804D until 14 days after the Department of Defense submits to the congressional defense committees its master plan for the consolidation of electronic combat test and evaluation assets.

The House report (H. Rept. 103-499) directed the Secretary of Defense to develop a master plan for future consolidation of all DOD electronic combat test and evaluation assets. Further, the House report directed that no fiscal year 1995 or prior year funds be used to transfer or consolidate electronic combat test and evaluation assets until 30 days after the submission of the master plan to the congressional defense committees. To date, the master plan has not been provided to the congressional defense committees and funds continue to be obligated for purposes that contravene the House report language.

Obligation of certain funds delayed until receipt of report on science and technology rescissions (sec. 224)

The conferees agree to a provision that limits the obligation of appropriations for Department of Defense research, development, test and evaluation until 14 days after the Under Secretary of Defense (Comptroller) submits a report to the congressional defense committees detailing the allocation of rescissions for science and technology required by the Emergency Supplemental Appropriations and Rescissions to Preserve and Enhance Military Readiness of the Department of Defense for Fiscal Year 1995 (Public Law 104-6).

Obligation of certain funds delayed until receipt of report on reductions in research, development, test, and evaluation (sec. 225)

The conferees agree to a provision that limits to 50 percent the obligation of appropriations in section 201(4) until 14 days after the Under Secretary of Defense (Comptroller) submits a report to the congressional defense committees detailing the allocation of the following reductions in research, development, test, and evaluation required by the Department of Defense Appropriations Act of 1996: (1) general reductions; (2) reductions to reflect savings from revised economic assumptions; (3) reductions to reflect the funding ceiling for federally funded research and development centers; and (4) reductions for savings through improved management of contractor automatic data processing cost charged through indirect rates on Department of Defense acquisition contracts.

Advanced field artillery system (Crusader) (sec. 226)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 255) that would impose spending authority limitations on the Secretary of the Army, unless certain technical performance criteria are achieved in the Crusader program. The provision would permit the Secretary to significantly alter the Crusader acquisition plan for the cannon propellant, if it is required to achieve the objectives of the Advanced Field Artillery System, provided notification is given to the defense committees of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would terminate funding for the liquid propellant portion of the Crusader program in the event that the Secretary fails to provide a report to the congressional defense committees by August 1, 1996, documenting that significant progress has been made in the liquid propellant and regenerative liquid propellant gun, in accordance with the acquisition program baseline objectives.

Demilitarization of conventional munitions, rockets, and explosives (sec. 227)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 263) that would authorize $15.0 million for the establishment of an integrated program for the development and demonstration of environmentally compliant technologies for the demilitarization of conventional munitions, explosives, and rocket motors, and indicated specific technologies that should be considered in the program.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would delete reference to specific technologies that should be considered in the program. The amendment reflects a conference agreement to authorize $15.0 million in PE 63104D for the Conventional Munitions, Rockets, and Explosives Demilitarization account.

The conferees are concerned about requirements for disposal by the military services and defense agencies of growing numbers of unserviceable, obsolete, or non-treaty compliant munitions, rocket motors and explosives. As environmental constraints increasingly restrict the traditional disposal methods of open burning or open detonation, development and demonstration of environmentally compliant technologies for this purpose become even more urgent.

The conferees believe that a centralized conventional munitions and explosives disposal program should be established for this purpose within the Department of Defense (DOD) under a single program element, and that consideration should be given to the model of the Large Rocket Motor Demilitarization program, centrally managed by the Army as executive agent, with the requirements of the military services integrated through the Joint Ordnance Commanders' Group. In such a program, the conferees encourage the consideration of a range of competitively selected potential resource recovery and alternative demilitarization technologies, including (but not limited to) cryogenic washout, supercritical water oxidation, molten metal pyrolysis, plasma arc, catalytic fluid bed oxidation, molten salt pyrolysis, plasma arc, catalytic fluid bed oxidation, molten salt oxidation, incineration, critical fluid extraction and ingredient recovery, and underground contained burning.

The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to submit a report of the DOD plan for the establishment of such a program to the congressional defense committees by March 31, 1996.

Defense airborne reconnaissance program (sec. 228)

The budget request included $525.2 million for research and development for the Defense airborne reconnaissance program (DARP).

The House bill would add a total of $121.6 million to the requested amount. The Senate amendment would increase the request by $33.0 million. Details of the adjustments in the House bill and the Senate amendment, as well as the final conference agreement, are displayed in the table below:

	Budget request	House bill	Senate amendment	Conference agreement

MANNED AND UNMANNED RECONNAISSANCE SYSTEMS

The conferees remain optimistic about the future contributions of unmanned aerial vehicle (UAV) systems to the Department of Defense's (DOD) reconnaissance missions. However, the conferees remain unwilling to sacrifice proven manned systems in the near-term for the promise of unproven future systems. Further, the conferees believe five major UAV programs are overly redundant. The conferees are aware of the Department's intent to reduce the number of UAVs to satisfy the tactical, theater, and strategic missions. The conferees agree that it is important for the Department to satisfy these three distinct missions.

Further, the conferees believe the Department's endurance UAV programs must be viewed in the larger context of the broad area search/wide area surveillance missions. The conferees are concerned that the current and projected array of sensors (including Tier II+ and Tier III− UAVs, SR-71, U-2, and national systems) are not simply "complementary", but are "duplicative". The conferees will, therefore, remain extremely interested in the Department's future directions with respect to high altitude endurance UAV efforts.

MANEUVER UAV

The budget request included $36.8 million for the maneuver UAV.

The House will would deny any authorization for the maneuver UAV because the Department had failed to provide either a joint operational requirements document (JORD) or a cost and operational effectiveness analysis (COEA) in a timely manner.

The Senate amendment would approve the budget request.

The conferees agree to authorize $26.8 million for the maneuver UAV. The conferees are disappointed that the Department took so long to complete the JORD and the COEA. The conferees hope that the results of the ongoing review of the various UAV programs will be provided to the congressional defense and intelligence committees in a more timely fashion.

JOINT TACTICAL UAV

The conferees remain particularly concerned about the Department's inability to develop and pursue a cohesive joint tactical UAV (JT-UAV) master plan for longer than a four month period. The conferees direct the Department not to use appropriated fiscal year 1996 funds to procure production Hunter UAV systems or additional low rate initial production units beyond those already ordered. The conferees intend that this prohibition remain in effect until the Department provides the congressional defense and intelligence committees with the results of its UAV program review. Accordingly, if the Department's review results in the cancellation of one or more of the currently planned UAV programs, the conferees direct the Department to seek reprogramming actions to use those funds to satisfy other CINC near-term reconnaissance support requirements. Any funds made available as a result of Department decisions on UAVs will remain within the DARP account. Of any resources made available from UAV restructuring, the conferees direct that the Department use them to fully fund the U-2 sensor upgrades described later in this section. Any additional excess resources over those used for U-2 sensor upgrades may be used for the naval variant (VTOL). Further, the conferees specifically deny authorization of any fiscal year 1996 funds for marinization of the Hunter UAV.

NAVAL VARIANT UAV

The conferees agree that development and evaluation of a joint tactical UAV (JT-UAV) short or vertical take-off and landing (STOL/VTOL) variant for naval applications should be continued and structured on existing successful efforts. The conferees agree to authorize an additional $12.5 million to support continued development and evaluation of VTOL JT-UAV variants, as detailed in the Senate report (S. Rept. 104-112). The conferees intend that the Department limit its air vehicle evaluation to items that are low risk, currently available off-the-shelf, and have the demonstrated potential to meet joint tactical UAV interoperability and performance requirements.

MEDIUM ALTITUDE ENDURANCE UAV (PREDATOR)

The House bill would authorize an additional $25.9 million for the Tier II medium altitude endurance UAV (Predator).

The Senate amendment included a provision (sec. 131) that would deny funds for the Tier II system.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees agree to authorize an additional $25.3 million for another Predator system (air vehicles and ground station) and replacement air vehicles. The conferees are encouraged by the successes of the Predator advanced concept technology program, and particularly by the theater commanders' praise for its contributions in the Bosnia area. The conferees strongly support continuation of this ACTD, and encourage the Department to take the necessary steps to make a full production decision. The conferees believe this vehicle could satisfy multiple operational roles, including the theater and maritime roles. The conferees encourage the Department to develop plans for a maritime use of this vehicle. Such planning should include conducting an operational demonstration at sea. Finally, the conferees agree to authorize all prior year allocated funds.

HIGH ALTITUDE ENDURANCE UAVS

The House bill would authorize an additional $60.0 million for the Tier II+ and $35.0 million for the Tier III-.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request for both programs.

The House recedes on Tier II+. The Senate recedes on the Tier III-. The conferees agree to authorize an additional $18.0 million for Tier III-.

As with the JT-UAV, the conferees expect the Department to make acquisition decisions on this issue based on operational requirements. However, the conferees emphasize that the Department needs a more capable, low observable vehicle. The conferees agree that the Department should use the additional $18.0 million for Tier III- to buy the third air vehicle in fiscal year 1996, instead of fiscal year 1997. The conferees direct the Department to provide the congressional defense and intelligence committees with a report on the operational user needs for such a vehicle. If the current estimate of the Tier III- system capabilities fall short of those needs, the Department should outline its technical proposals to improve this vehicle, in response to those user requirements.

U-2 SENSOR UPGRADES

The House bill would authorize an additional $14.0 million to upgrade all Senior Year electro-optical reconnaissance sensors (SYERS) to the newest configuration, upgrade existing ground stations, and improve geolocational accuracy through various product improvements.

The Senate amendment would authorize an additional $20.0 million to initiate the remote airborne SIGINT system upgrade program.

The Senate report (S. Rept. 104-112) contained a technical error in the table for Research, Development, Test, and Evaluation (RDT&E), Defense-Wide, that shows an increase in the DARP PE 35154D, line 102, rather than in line 124. This error was facilitated by the Department's budget exhibit for RDT&E programs (R-1) in which both of these budget lines are associated with the same program element. The conferees encourage the Defense Airborne Reconaissance Office (DARO) to carry a single R-1 line for an individual program element in the future.

The conferees view with concern the DARO's lack of emphasis on manned reconnaissance upgrades, and include a provision that requires the Director of the DARO to expeditiously carry out those upgrades. The conferees agree to authorize $34.0 million to meet U-2 sensor upgrade requirements, and direct the Secretary of Defense to provide a report on the Department's plans to obligate funds for U-2 upgrades prior to February 1, 1996.

U-2 DEFENSIVE SYSTEMS

The conferees agree to authorize $10.0 million to upgrade U-2 defensive systems for the purposes specified in the Senate Report (S. Rept. 104-112).

COMMON IMAGERY GROUND/SURFACE SYSTEM (CIGSS)

The budget request included $161.8 million for the CIGSS effort.

The House bill would authorize an additional $16.0 million. This increase would be used to mitigate a near-term funding shortfall for DARO's "migration" of the various imagery ground stations to a common architecture.

The Senate amendment would approve the budget request.

The conferees agree to authorize an additional $11.0 million for this effort.

INTELLIGENCE DISSEMINATION

The budget request included funds for numerous intelligence dissemination systems and data links.

The House bill would restrict the use of funds pending the Department's development of a coherent, long-term intelligence dissemination architecture and a plan for development of a joint tactical transceiver (JTT).

The Senate amendment would authorize the requested amounts.

The House recedes.

The conferees are pleased with the Department's response to the House bill provision. The conferees believe that the Department is moving in the right direction to ensure service interoperability and to reduce the number of unique tactical intelligence transceivers. Additionally, the conferees are aware that the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Command, Control, Communications, and Intelligence is monitoring efforts to develop advanced software reprogrammable radios. The conferees strongly encourage continued involvement in this technology development, as it appears to have great potential for future application in the JTT program. The conferees will continue to monitor the progress of the Department's approach.

ELECTRO-OPTICAL FRAMING SENSOR DEVELOPMENT

The House would authorize an additional $5.0 million to continue development and evaluation of airborne electro-optic framing senor and multi-spectral framing technologies with on-chip forward motion compensation. These improved capabilities could be used to support precision targeting.

The Senate amendment included no similar adjustment.

The conferees agree to authorize $7.0 million for this purpose.

The conferees are pleased with the results of the four million picture element (four mega-pixel) framing demonstration. The conferees encourage the Department to program funding to accelerate the four mega-pixel and the 25 mega-pixel sensor initiatives.

MULTI-FUNCTION SELF-ALIGNED GATE TECHNOLOGY

The conferees agree to authorize $8.0 million for multi-function self-aligned gate (MSAG) technology for the purposes specified in the House report (H. Rept. 104-131).

JOINT AIRBORNE SIGINT ARCHITECTURE

The budget request included $88.8 million for the joint airborne signals intelligence (SIGINT) architecture (JASA) program.

The House bill would restrict obligation of fiscal year 1996 funds for JASA to no more than 25 percent of available funds until the Department submits an analysis and report that includes a comparison of future years defense programs (FYDP) and life cycle costs for development and fielding of the joint airborne SIGINT system (JASS), and that address a more conventional, evolutionary, product-improvement approach.

The Senate amendment would authorize the requested amount.

The House recedes on the funding restrictions.

Despite their support for the evolving concept and development of JASA, the conferees remain concerned about several issues:

(1) the Department's ability to sustain current operational systems;

(2) elimination of the potential for airborne SIGINT modernization gaps prior to fielding JASA components;

(3) the projected costs of the JASS program; and

(4) the risk that current approaches may sacrifice near and mid-term operational requirements for promised long-term common solutions.

The conferees believe that there is a need to continue interim, affordable, incremental upgrades, and to provide quick reaction capability improvements to meet emerging requirements, while continuing the JASA architectural approach. The conferees encourage competitive evolutionary solutions to satisfy existing and projected SIGINT requirements, and urge the earliest delivery of architecturally compliant components for evolving current and future systems. The conferees expect future budget requests for the DARO to include funding for these efforts. The conferees direct the DARO Director to certify to the congressional defense and intelligence committees that the individual SIGINT systems will be upgraded to incorporate these interim needs, as identified by the operational users.

The conferees direct the Department to provide an interim report by March 1, 1996, with a completed report by August 1, 1996, that includes:

(1) an independent cost and operational effectiveness analysis that compares the FYDP and life-cycle costs of the JASS program to an evolutionary product improvement approach, based on equivalent system performance;

(2) an evaluation of cost, technical and schedule risks, as well as a comparison of technical requirements and JASS performance; and

(3) the Department's assessment of its ability to predict both the future threat and technology environments necessary to determine whether a single approach is viable and in the nation's best interests.

Finally, to ensure that there are no airborne SIGINT capability gaps during the transition to JASA, DARO is directed to determine and implement necessary quick-reaction improvements to existing airborne systems. The conferees intend that the Department pursue a balanced approach to JASA development that allows the services to program funds for such evolutionary upgrades, provided there is compliance with an overall migration to the JASA architecture.

Subtitle C—Ballistic Missile Defense Act of 1995

Ballistic missile defense policy (secs. 231–253)

The House bill contained eight provisions (secs. 231–238) that collectively would be called the "Ballistic Missile Defense Act of 1995". The House bill contained four additional provisions (secs. 241–244) that would also deal with matters related to ballistic missile defense (BMD).

The Senate amendment contained eleven provisions (secs. 231–241) that collectively would be called the "Missile Defense Act of 1995". The Senate amendment contained two additional provisions (secs. 227 and 243) that would also deal with matters related to BMD.

The conference agreement combines the House and the Senate BMD provisions into two subtitles as described below.

Short title (sec. 231)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 231) that would entitle this group of provisions the "Ballistic Missile Defense Act of 1995."

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 231) that would use a different title—"Missile Defense Act of 1995"—reflecting the fact that the Senate version included a provision dealing with cruise missile defense.

The Senate recedes.

Findings (sec. 232)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 232) that would establish a series of congressional findings as the rationale for developing and deploying theater and national ballistic missile defenses.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 242) that would make several similar findings.

The House recedes with an amendment merging the House and Senate findings.

Ballistic Missile Defense Policy (sec. 233)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 232) that would establish a United States policy to: (1) deploy at the earliest practical date highly effective theater missile defenses; and (2) deploy at the earliest practical date a national missile defense (NMD) system that is capable of providing a highly effective defense of the United States against limited ballistic missile attacks.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 233) that would establish a United States policy to: (1) deploy as soon as possible affordable and operationally effective theater missile defenses; (2) develop for deployment a multiple-site national missile defense system (that can be augmented to a layered defense over time) while initiating negotiations to amend the Anti-Ballistic Missile (ABM) Treaty; (3) ensure congressional review prior to a decision to deploy the NMD system; (4) improve existing cruise missile defense systems and deploy as soon as practical defenses against advanced cruise missiles; (5) pursue a focused research and development program to provide follow-on ballistic missile defense options; (6) employ streamlined acquisitions procedures in developing and deploying missile defenses; (7) seek a cooperative transition to a regime that does not feature mutual assured destruction and an offense-only form of deterrence as the basis for strategic stability; and (8) carry out the policies, programs, and requirements of the Missile Defense Act through processes specified within, or consistent with, the ABM Treaty.

The House recedes with an amendment to establish a United States policy to: (1) deploy affordable and operationally effective theater missile defenses to protect forward-deployed and expeditionary elements of the armed forces of the United States and to complement and support the missile defense capabilities of the forces of coalition partners and allies of the United States; (2) deploy a National Missile Defense system that is affordable and operationally effective against limited, accidental, or unauthorized attacks on the territory of the United States and can be augmented over time as the threat changes to provide a layered defense; (3) initiate negotiations with the Russian Federation as necessary to provide for deployment of the NMD system required by this Act; (4) consider, if those negotiations fail, the option of withdrawing from the ABM Treaty in accordance with the provisions of Article XV of that treaty; (5) ensure congressional review, before deployment of an NMD system, of the affordability and operational effectiveness of such a system, the threat to be countered by such a system, and ABM Treaty considerations with respect to such a system; and (6) seek a cooperative transition to a regime that does not feature mutual assured destruction and an offense-only form of deterrence as the basis of strategic stability.

Theater Missile Defense Architecture (sec. 234)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 233) that, in part, would direct the Secretary of Defense to develop and deploy at the earliest practical date advanced theater missile defense (TMD) systems. The House bill contained another provision (sec. 236) that would establish a ballistic missile defense program accountability report.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 234) that would provide detailed policy guidance related to theater missile defense. The provision would establish a core theater missile defense program (the Theater High Altitude Area Defense system, the Navy Upper Tier system, the Patriot PAC–3 system, and the Navy Lower Tier system) with programmatic milestones for each core system, require that the systems in the core program be interoperable and mutually supporting, establish guidelines for creating new core systems, and require the Secretary of Defense to provide the congressional defense committees a TMD Architecture report along with the fiscal year 1997 budget submission.

The House recedes with an amendment to integrate elements of the House's ballistic missile defense program accountability provision into a revised TMD reporting requirement, and to make technical and clarifying changes. Included is a requirement that the Secretary of Defense report on the following matters to the Senate Committee on Armed Services and the House Committee on National Security whenever the Secretary issues an ABM Treaty compliance certification for any TMD system: (1) the compliance policy applied in preparing such a certification; (2) how the policy applied differs from the policy stated in section 237(b)(1) of this Act (the so-called "demonstrated standard"); and (3) how the application of that compliance policy (rather than the "demonstrated standard") will affect the cost, schedule, and performance of the TMD system being considered.

National missile defense architecture (sec. 235)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 233) that, in part, would direct the Secretary of Defense to develop for deployment at the earliest practical date a national missile defense system consisting of: (1) up to 100 ground-based interceptors at a single site or a greater number of interceptors at a number of sites, as determined necessary by the Secretary; (2) fixed, ground-based radars; (3) space based sensors, including those sensor systems that are capable of cuing ground-based interceptors and providing initial targeting vectors; and (4) battle management, command, control, and communications.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 235) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to take the following steps regarding NMD: (1) develop for deployment an affordable and operationally effective NMD system (consisting of ground-based interceptors capable of being deployed at multiple sites, ground-based radars, space-based sensors, and battle management, command, control, and communications) to counter a limited, accidental, or unauthorized ballistic missile attack, and which is capable of attaining initial operational capability by the end of 2003; (2) develop an interim operational capability plan that would give the United States the ability to field a limited NMD system by the end of 1999; (3) prescribe and use streamlined acquisition procedures; (4) employ additional cost saving measures; and (5) report on his plan for NMD deployment and an analysis of options for supplementing the initial NMD architecture to improve cost and operational effectiveness. The Senate amendment also contained a provision (sec. 235(d)(2)) that would prohibit the use of Minuteman boosters in any NMD architecture.

The House recedes with an amendment requiring the Secretary of Defense to take the following steps regarding NMD: (1) develop for deployment an NMD system which shall achieve an IOC by the end of 2003 and which shall include ground-based interceptors capable of being deployed at multiple-sites, ground-based radars, space-based sensors, and BM/C3; (2) begin preparatory and planning actions and take other actions necessary to achieve an IOC by the end of 2003; and (3) submit a report on NMD to the congressional defense committees.

The Senate recedes on its provision prohibiting the use of Minuteman boosters in any NMD architecture. The conferees support the development of a new optimized booster for the NMD mission. The conferees direct BMDO to consult with the Senate Committee on Armed Services and the House Committee on National Security prior to developing or implementing any plans to expend significant funds on any activities associated with the use of Minuteman boosters for NMD-related purposes.

Policy regarding the ABM Treaty (sec. 236)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 237) that would clarify that the policies, programs, and requirements of the "Missile Defense Act of 1995" (subtitle C of title II of the Senate amendment) can be accomplished through processes specified in the ABM Treaty, and that would express the Sense of Congress that the Senate should review the continuing value and validity of the ABM Treaty.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 242(c)(2)) that would urge the President to pursue high-level discussions with Russia to amend the ABM Treaty.

The Senate recedes with an amendment urging the President to pursue high-level discussions with the Russian Federation to amend the ABM Treaty to allow: (1) deployment of multiple ground-based ABM sites; (2) the unrestricted exploitation of sensors; and (3) increased flexibility for development, testing, and deployment of follow-on NMD systems.

Prohibition on use of funds to implement an international agreement concerning theater missile defense systems (sec. 237)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 235) that would establish a theater missile defense demarcation standard (the so-called "demonstrated standard" based on the range and speed of the target) and would prohibit the obligation or expenditure of funds appropriated for the Department of Defense to implement or employ any other standard.

The Senate amendment contained a related provision (sec. 238) that would: (1) express the sense of Congress that the "demonstrated standard" is the appropriate standard for defining a TMD demarcation; and (2) prohibit the use of funds appropriated for the Department of Defense in fiscal year 1996 to implement an international agreement that is inconsistent with this standard, unless such agreement receives Senate advice and consent to ratification, or is specifically approved in a subsequent Act.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Ballistic missile defense cooperation with allies (sec. 238)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 242) that, in part, would endorse cooperation in the area of ballistic missile defense between the United States and its allies and coalition partners, and that would urge the President to: (1) pursue high-level discussions with allies of the United States and selected other states on the means and methods by which the parties can cooperate in the development, deployment, and operation of ballistic missile defenses; (2) take the initiative within the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to develop a consensus for deployment of BMD by the Alliance; and (3) seek agreement with U.S. allies and selected other states on steps the parties can take to reduce the risks posed by the threat of limited ballistic missile attacks.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to include the House language on BMD cooperation with allies as a free-standing provision.

Advanced lithography program (sec. 271)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 214) that would amend section 216 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1995 (Public Law 103–337). The provision would permit the Director of the Advanced Research Projects Agency (ARPA) to consider Semiconductor Industry Association and Semiconductor Technology Council recommendations as advisory and would allow ARPA to establish priorities and funding levels for the program, consistent with the best interests of national security. The provision would also add a goal that the program ensure that the use of lithographic processes, being developed by American-owned manufacturers in the United States, would lead to superior performance electronics systems for the Department of Defense.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would clarify the term "American-owned manufacturer" to mean that it would be consistent with the definition of "United States-owned company" and "United States incorporated company" in section 278 (n) of title 15, United States Code.

Enhanced fiber optic guided missile system (sec. 272)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 215) that would require the Secretary of the Army to certify whether there is a requirement for the enhanced fiber optic guided missile (EFOG–M) system, and whether there is a cost and effectiveness analysis supporting such requirement. The provision would also limit funding for the EFOG–M program if the test of operational missiles and associated fire units are not delivered on time and within current cost estimates.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the certification of the Secretary of the Army regarding a requirement and a cost and effectiveness analysis to support the requirement for the EFOG–M system to be provided following completion of the Advanced Concept Technology Demonstration (ACTD), instead of before the ACTD, as proposed by the House.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

University research initiative support program (sec. 275)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 254) that would amend Section 802 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1994 (Public Law 103–160). The provision would change the university research initiative support program from a mandatory program to a voluntary program and provide for improved review procedures.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Revisions of manufacturing of science and technology program (sec. 276)

The House bill contained a provision that would eliminate the technology-based focus for the manufacturing of science and technology program, and provide new emphasis on near-term cost reduction applications. The provision would also require a larger non-federal government cost share for 25 percent of the program appropriation, and eliminate cost share for academic institutions.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 222) that would amend section 2525 of title 10, United States Code, in two ways. The provision clarified the role of the Joint Directors of Laboratories in establishing the Manufacturing Science and Technology Program. The provision included a requirement that manufacturing equipment producers be more directly involved in projects funded under this program.

The conferees agree to an amendment that would combine the House and Senate provisions.

The conferees support the transfer of the MANTECH program from advanced development to a Research, Development, Test & Evaluation (RDT&E) production support account to ensure direct impact of manufacturing technology on reduction of production and repair costs for todays systems. However, the conferees direct that a balance be maintained between near-term manufacturing solutions for weapons systems and the long range manufacturing design needs, such as implementing Integrated Products and Process Development (IPPD) in future systems.

The conferees would include the House provision to set aside 25 percent of the funding for the manufacturing technology program for entering into contracts and cooperative agreements, on a cost-share basis, in which the ration of funding provided by non-federal and federal participants is 2 to 1. The conferees have included a provision that would allow the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology to waive the requirement after July 15 of each fiscal year. The conferees direct that contracts and cooperative agreements awarded to meet this requirement be on a project-by-project basis. The conferees direct that the Department maximize the number of contracts and cooperative agreements, to the extent practicable.

The conferees expect the Department of Defense and the services to request an aggressive fiscal year 1997 MANTECH budget that reflects program needs. As a goal, the Department should consider funding this program at approximately one percent of the services' RDT&E budgets. The conferees also believe that the Secretary of Defense should place the highest priority on addressing the management and budget process issues that have adversely affected the MANTECH program.

Five-year plan for consolidation of defense laboratories and test and evaluation centers (sec. 277)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 259) that would require the Secretary of Defense to prepare a five year strategic plan to consolidate and restructure the Department's research and development laboratories and test and evaluation centers.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees note with concern that the recent progress in bio-technology could potentially lead to the development of new biological warfare agents and capabilities among potential adversaries of the United States. The conferees direct that the Department report to the congressional defense committees by March 1, 1996 on the national security threats posed by such potential developments of new agents through advances in bio-technology and genetic engineering. The report should also include recommendations related to reducing the impact of progress in these areas, examine the utility of increased emphasis on research and development of medical countermeasures related to mid-term or far-term biowarfare threat agents; and identify other measures that could reduce the threat of these technological advances and reduce the threat of biological agent and weapons proliferation.

Cross reference to congressional defense policy concerning national technology and industrial base, reinvestment, and conversion in operation of defense research and development programs

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 262) that would cross-reference sections 2358(a)(2)(B) and 2371(a) with section 2501 of title 10, United States Code, to encourage the use of dual-use technology programs in defense research and technology programs.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Fiber optic acoustic sensor system

The budget request included $21.3 million in PE 63504N for the advanced submarine combat systems development program.

The provision also reduced funding for the advanced submarine systems development program (PE 63561N) by $6.9 million.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees agree to the authorization of an additional $6.9 million above the budget request in PE 63504N for advanced development of fiber optic acoustic sensor systems, including the development of common optical towed arrays.

Joint targeting support system testbed

The budget request included $141.4 million in PE 24229N for the Tomahawk missile and the Tomahawk mission planning center programs.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 265) that would reallocate project funding within PE 24229N. The provision would increase funding for Tomahawk theater mission planning by $10.0 million in order to establish a joint targeting support system testbed and would reduce funding for Tomahawk missile development by $10.0 million, as an offset.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees agree to an additional authorization of $4.0 million in PE 24229N to initiate development of a joint targeting support system testbed (JTSST) for demonstration of potential joint targeting operations. The conferees understand that an initial study would investigate the relative roles of the existing systems installed in the Tomahawk mission planning center and other mission planning systems that are being developed by the individual military services. It is recognized that these systems are projected to have embedded precision weapons planning capabilities.

The conferees expect that the results of the initial JTSST study and follow-on demonstrations will contribute to the definition of long-term objectives, guidelines, and schedule milestones for convergence of the Navy/Marine Corps tactical aircraft mission planning systems and the Air Force mission support system, and should lead to the development of a joint mission planning system architecture for the military services.

The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to report to the congressional defense committees as soon as possible, but no later than the submission of the fiscal year 1998 budget request. This report shall describe the Secretary's plan for implementing the recommendations that result from the study.

Battlefield Integration Center

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 201(4)(C)) that would authorize the use of up to $25.0 million in Defensewide research, development, test, and evaluation (RDT&E) funds made available for Other Theater Missile Defense activities for the Army's Battlefield Integration Center (BIC).

The Senate recedes. The conferees agree to authorize an increase of $21.0 million in PE 63308A for the BIC.

Marine Corps shore fire support

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 213) that would not allow more than fifty percent of the funds appropriated in fiscal year 1996 for the Tomahawk Baseline Improvement Program to be obligated until the Secretary of the Navy certifies that a program has been established and fully funded. That program would lead to a live fire test of an Army Extended Range Multiple Launch Rocket from an Army launcher on a Navy ship before October 1, 1997.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes. Further guidance relative to the consideration of the Army Extended Range Multiple Launch Rocket System in the Navy Surface Fire Support program is contained elsewhere in the Statement of Managers.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 225) that would authorize $5.0 million for continued development of the DAGGR system.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes. DAGGR technology has indicated potential capability which might be used to counter threats such as 122-millimeter rockets and cruise missiles. The conferees encourage the Secretary of the Army to include this program in the fiscal year 1997 budget request, and, if warranted, consider a reprogramming request to provide funding for DAGGR in fiscal year 1996.

PACER COIN

The budget request included $5.5 million in procurement and $19.5 million in operations and maintenance funding for the PACER COIN aircraft.

The House bill would deny all funding, effectively terminating this program.

The Senate amendment would authorize the Department's request.

The House recedes.

The conferees are aware of the conflicting positions of responsible officials within the Department of Defense. Although the regional Commander in Chief has made a recent statement of need for continuing the PACER COIN mission, the conferees understand that the National Guard Bureau has requested that the Air Force terminate the PACER COIN program. The conferees also understand that the Air Force intends to phase out the PACER COIN aircraft and mission in fiscal year 1998, and that the National Guard Bureau intends to shift the mission of the Reno Air National Guard C–130 unit to flying air drop missions. Finally, the conferees understand there is current direction which restricts the Reno Guard from beginning air drop training until the PACER COIN mission is terminated.

The conferees agree to authorize the budget request. Nevertheless, the conferees remain unconvinced that the PACER COIN program, within its current mission tasking, provides such unique intelligence collection as to justify continued spending of limited resources on this mission. However, the conferees agree that:

(1) terminating the PACER COIN program immediately this fiscal year would place unacceptable stresses on the personnel system;

(2) the Department has already obligated fiscal year 1996 funds for this mission; and

(3) the Air Force would need funds to terminate the program and provide proper aircraft/equipment disposition.

The conferees direct the Department to determine whether or not the PACER COIN aircraft could be used in a dual use role. The conferees believe that the analysis should answer several questions, including at least the following:

(1) Could the aircraft be used, without certain PACER COIN systems, in an air drop role?

(2) Could the aircraft be configured to simultaneously perform the PACER COIN mission and carry the SENIOR SCOUT tactical intelligence system?

(3) What alternatives are there for filling the. . . .

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

DBOF transfers

The conferees reduced the civilian personnel funding request by $226.0 million. Of this amount, the conferees expect that $96.0 million will be realized from projected savings from Defense Business Operations Fund (DBOF) activities. The conferees direct that $96.0 million be transferred from the DBOF to the accounts from which the reductions are taken.

The conferees also reduced the operation and maintenance (O&M) accounts of the services by $180.0 million, in anticipation of savings from efficiencies in the management of Department of Defense inventories. The conferees direct that $180.0 million be transferred from the DBOF to the following O&M accounts: Army, $60.0 million; Navy, $60.0 million; Air Force, $60.0 million.

Restriction on devolving the Defense Environmental Restoration Account to the military services

In a memorandum dated May 3, 1995, the Deputy Secretary of Defense announced a proposal to devolve the Defense Environmental Restoration Account (DERA), a single transfer account administered by the Department of Defense, to four separate transfer accounts administered by the individual military services. The execution of the Deputy Secretary of Defense's proposal would require modification of the DERA statutory framework.

The conferees are concerned the devolution of DERA would impede congressional oversight of the management and use of funds authorized for and appropriated to the account. In relation to development, the conferees desire a thorough description of the means by which the Department of Defense would ensure consistent funding and accountability for environmental restoration activities. Moreover, the Department of Defense needs to identify the monetary savings and administrative efficiencies associated with DERA development. The Department of Defense also must specify funding and staffing reductions for the office of the Deputy Under Secretary of Defense for Environmental Security that would result from DERA devolution.

The conferees agree that, in the event that the Department of Defense intends to pursue legislation to authorize devolvement for fiscal year 1997, the Secretary of Defense must submit a report to Congress, no later than March 31, 1996. The report should provide full justification for DERA devolvement and address the matters outlined above. In the absence of the requested information this year, the conferees decline to authorize a change to the existing statutory scheme for DERA at this time.

National defense sealift fund

SUMMARY

The budget request included $974.2 million in the national defense sealift fund (NDSF) for the procurement of two new strategic sealift ships, operations and maintenance of the national defense reserve fleet (NDRF), acquisition and modification of additional ships for the ready reserve force (RRF) of the NDRF, and research and development of mid-term sealift ship technologies.

The House bill would authorize $974.2 million for the NDSF, the budget request.

The Senate amendment would authorize $1.08 billion for the NDSF, an increase of $110.0 million. This increase would be for the purpose of purchasing and converting one additional ship for enhancement of the Marine Corps' maritime prepositioning ship (MPS) program.

The conferees agree to authorize $1.02 billion for the NDSF, an increase of $50.0 million. Items of special interest are discussed in the following sections.

NATIONAL DEFENSE FEATURES

The House bill did not authorize the $70.0 million included in the NDSF budget request for the procurement and modification of additional roll-on/roll-off (RO/RO) ships for the RRF. Instead, it would authorize $70.0 million for the procurement and installation of national defense features (NDF) on commercial vehicle carriers built in and documented under the laws of the United States, as required by section 2218, title 10, United States Code.

The Senate amendment dealt with the $70.0 million included in the NDSF budget request for the procurement and modification of RRF RO/RO vessels as follows:

(1) $20.0 million to modify RO/RO vessels purchased in fiscal year 1995; and

(2) $50.0 million to procure and install defense features on commercial RO/RO vessels that would be built in United States shipyards.

The conferees agree that, of the amount authorized for the NDSF, $50.0 million shall be for the procurement and installation of NDF and $20.0 million shall be for modification of the RRF RO/RO vessels purchased in fiscal year 1995. The conferees also restrict the obligation of the $20.0 million authorized for the modification of RRF RO/RO vessels until 30 days after the Secretary of Defense has notified the congressional defense committees that a NDF program has been formally established and that at least $50.0 million has been made available to fund it.

MARITIME PREPOSITIONING SHIP ENHANCEMENT

The budget request of $974.2 million for the national defense sealift fund (NDSF) did not include funding for any enhancements to the Marine Corps' maritime prepositioning force.

In order to continue a program initiated last year, the Senate amendment would authorize $110.0 million above the NDSF budget request to purchase and convert an additional MPS ship.

The House bill would authorize the budget request. It did not address the issue of MPS enhancement.

The conferees would not authorize funds for MPS enhancement in the conference agreement. However, the conferees reaffirm their strong support for the MPS enhancement program. This program will enable the marine Corps to add additional tanks, and expeditionary airfield, additional Navy construction battalion equipment, a fleet hospital, and other supplies to each MPS squadron, to better sustain the marine Corps as an expeditionary force.

The conferees believe that there are substantial benefits inherent in an MPS enhancement program. Consequently, the conferees are troubled by the department's failure to include funding for a second MPS enhancement ship in the fiscal year 1996 budget request, and by the lack of progress in acquiring and converting the MPS enhancement ship authorized and appropriated in fiscal year 1995.

The conferees note, however, that the Navy appears to have made some recent progress in developing a well-defined program. In view of the above, the conferees strongly encourage the Secretary of Defense to accelerate the pace at which additional sealift capability is acquired (to include funding for a second MPS enhancement ship in fiscal year 1997). However, the conferees expect the Secretary to adhere to the prepositioning, surge, and RRF priorities established by the Mobility Requirements Study (MRS) and validated by the MRS Bottom Up Review Update.

The conferees also expect the Navy to aggressively pursue all possible procurement options, including multi-ship and commercial procurement, to achieve the cost savings associated with the acquisition, conversion, and delivery of MPS enhancement vessels. The Secretary of Defense is directed to report on the progress made in meeting this goal when he submits the fiscal year 1997 budget request.

ADVANCED SUBMARINE TECHNOLOGY RESEARCH

The conferees agree that, of the amount appropriated for fiscal year 1996 for the NDSF, $50.0 million shall be available only for the Director of the Advanced Research Projects Agency for advanced submarine technology activities.

National Security Agency Oversight

The budget request included $5.0 million in operations and maintenance (O&M) funds and 82 new personnel billets for National Security Agency (NSA) oversight of tactical signals intelligence (SIGINT) system development.

The House bill would not authorize the $5.0 million O&M request.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The conferees question the necessity for 82 persons to perform a function that could be significantly facilitated by automation and improved electronic connectivity, but recognize both the importance of the program and the commitment of the Deputy Secretary of Defense and the Director of NSA to this effort. Accordingly, the conferees agree to authorize the budget request, but direct that the 82 billets be transferred from the Consolidated Cryptological Program (CCP) to the Defense Cryptological Program (DCP), resulting in no net gain in United States SIGINT System activities. The conferees understand that this billet transfer may temporarily force NSA to exceed its personnel ceilings. The conferees agree to authorize NSA to remain above its personnel ceiling through fiscal year 1997 for this purpose, but expect that, as of September 30, 1997, NSA will meet its congressionally mandated 17.5 percent reduction target. The conferees also urge NSA to review the requirements for each of these billets for validity and consistency.

Department of Defense next generation weather radar-doppler

The Department of the Air Force operates 21 next generation weather radar-doppler (NEXRAD) weather radar equipment in CONUS that primarily function to protect military locations. Additionally, Department of Defense (DOD) radar provides supplementary data to the National Weather Service (NWS) and its national radar network.

DOD NEXRADs are maintained at operational standards that meet military requirements. Due to increasing NWS reliance on the DOD NEXRADS for primary and back-up coverage, efforts have been made to increase the reliability of the DOD radar to meet NWS operating standards.

The conferees direct the Secretary of the Air Force to report by March 31, 1996, on the measures needed to conform the operation of the NEXRADS to the NWS operating standards. The report should address any resource requirements, including personnel and funds.

Reengineering household goods moves

The conferees commend the Department of Defense for initiating efforts to incorporate efficient business practices in its household goods moving operations. The objective of these efforts should be to procure commercial services at the lowest possible cost while ensuring service members and their families receive the best possible service.

Current procurement practices are cumbersome and inefficient, resulting in clearly unacceptable costs for both DOD and the moving industry. It is not apparent that the time and expense associated with processing redundant paperwork and administering a government-unique system are necessary to ensure a level of service for DOD customers that meets the industry standard.

Further, current practices are structured in such a way that service members and their families are subjected to unnecessary administrative burdens. Claims procedures and the evaluation system are outdated and seemingly disconnected from the concept of quality control, and can be frustrating to customers. Because military relocations account for a substantial share of moving industry work, DOD should be able to implement simple, cost-effective procedures which simultaneously assure first class service for customers.

However, current DOD practices do not reflect best industry practices, such that the DOD operation should be reengineered, rather than simply reorganized. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to initiate a pilot program to reengineer household goods moves. The Secretary should direct the incorporation of commercial practices, and report on the program not later than February 15, 1996, prior to implementation of any element of the pilot program. The report should be accompanied by comments from the industry.

The Secretary may not implement any element of the pilot program that could adversely affect small businesses, including extension or application of Federal Acquisition Regulations into this matter, until 90 days after the submission of the report.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Subtitle A—Authorization of Appropriations

Armed Forces Retirement Home (sec. 303)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 303) that would authorize an appropriation from the Armed Forces Retirement Home (AFRH) Trust Fund for operation of the AFRH in fiscal year 1996.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 303) that would authorize an identical appropriation from the trust fund, and authorize a new appropriation of $45.0 million to the trust fund. The recommendation for this new appropriation directly to the trust fund would address the problem of its potential insolvency due to unanticipated decreases in the long-established funding stream approved by Congress for operation of the AFRH.

The Senate recedes.

Congress established a funding program whereby the AFRH would be self-sustaining, and not dependent on public funds. The U.S. Soldiers' and Airmen's Home in Washington, DC, has operated successfully according to this program since its inception in 1851. The U.S. Naval Home (established in 1834 and located since 1976 in Gulfport, MS) had been funded differently, relying on public funds from 1935 until 1991, when both homes were incorporated into the AFRH (Armed Forces Retirement Home Act of 1991; P.L. 101-510). The Act brought both homes under the unified management of the Armed Forces Retirement Home Board and merged the trust funds of the two homes.

Subsequent to incorporation, the annual operating costs for both homes of the AFRH have been authorized by Congress, to be drawn (appropriated) from a single trust fund. Since the funding program provided that interest from the trust fund, fines and forfeitures, and a monthly assessment from the pay of active duty enlisted service members and warrant officers would maintain the solvency of the trust fund, no appropriation outside the fund was envisioned to be necessary.

However, Congress did not anticipate the magnitude of reductions in the armed forces prompted by the end of the Cold War. These reductions caused a decrease in the funding stream as the income derived from assessments decreased. The high quality of the force resulted in fewer disciplinary problems, which in turn resulted in less income from fines and forfeitures. This is significant because fines and forfeitures account for more than half the income.

The trust fund now has a negative cash flow because more money is required for operation of the AFRH than is available from income. The corpus of the trust fund is being depleted, and the conferees recognize the need to implement changes to prevent insolvency. The conferees believe it would be easier, preferable, and more advantageous to implement corrective measures in the next few years, rather than wait for the problem to become much more serious.

The conferees note that Congress addressed the funding problem in the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1995 by providing authority for an increase in the monthly assessment. The 1995 provision also established a schedule of increases for resident fees and required a comprehensive study by the Board on funding alternatives for the AFRH. However, the study will not be completed until December 1995, and the Department of Defense has declined to increase the assessment prior to completion of the study. The conferees note that an increase in the assessment, from 50 cents to one dollar per month, may not of itself resolve the cash flow problem. A combination of efficiencies and funding program changes may be appropriate.

The conferees strongly support the fine work of the Board, and agree to wait for the outcome of the study in order not to restrict the consideration of efficiencies. The conferees encourage the Secretary of Defense and the Board to continue their efforts to examine alternative methods of meeting the long-term financial requirements of the AFRH, while maintaining high quality service for the residents.

Transfer from National Defense Stockpile Transaction Fund (sec. 304)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 304) that would authorize the transfer of $150.0 million from the National Defense Stockpile Transition fund to the operation and maintenance accounts of the services.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Civil Air Patrol (sec. 305)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 305) that would reduce the level of Department of Defense support to the Civil Air Patrol (CAP) by $2.9 million from the budget request of $27.5 million.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

This reduction would realize savings by accelerating a CAP reorganization in which many of the functions performed by Air Force personnel in the past would then be performed by employees of the CAP. This reorganization, which was originally planned to be completed in fiscal year 1997, will not be completed during fiscal year 1996.

Subtitle B—Depot-Level Activities

Policy regarding performance of depot-level maintenance and repair for the Department of Defense (sec. 311)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 395) that would amend current law to establish the importance to national security of maintaining a core depot-level maintenance and repair capability within Department of Defense (DOD) facilities. The provision would address core work determinations, interservicing, competition, and an exclusion from workload limitations for large individual maintenance projects. It would also repeal two limitations on the performance of depot-level work (10 U.S.C. 2466 and 2469), effective December 31, 1996.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 311) that would require the Secretary of Defense to develop a comprehensive policy on the performance of depot-level maintenance and repair, and submit a report on the policy to the congressional defense committees by March 31, 1996. The provision would condition the repeal of the two current limitations on congressional approval of the recommended policy.

The House recedes with an amendment that would clarify both the content of the policy and considerations to be made by the Secretary. The amendment would also affirm that it is the sense of Congress that DOD must articulate core workload requirements as a necessary first step toward developing a policy.

The conferees believe that it would be extremely difficult for Congress to approve a policy that does not provide for the performance of core depot-level workload in public facilities.

Although the conferees do not wish to prescribe more than a broad outline of the areas to be addressed by the Secretary, the conferees believe it is useful to direct the Secretary to consider numerous matters in developing the policy, and to report on items of interest.

The conferees believe it is both preferable and entirely possible for DOD to develop an acceptable, comprehensive policy that will serve the best interests of national security. The conferees also believe that such a policy could achieve efficiencies, and result in resolving the constant debate over how to apportion work between the public and private sectors.

With respect to the exclusion for large individual maintenance projects contained in the House provision, the conferees note that certain projects may account for a large share of a military department's maintenance and repair budget. This is the case with respect to complex overhauls of naval vessels, particularly nuclear-powered aircraft carriers, whose overhaul and refueling can absorb a large percentage of the Navy's maintenance and repair budget in a given fiscal year. Amounts expended for such large projects could, if counted against the limitation prescribed under current law (10 U.S.C. 2466), affect the application of the formula for the apportionment of work between the public and private sectors.

The conferees note that the impact of large maintenance projects could have unintended consequences on the application of section 2466. Until the workload limitations are repealed, the conferees direct the Secretary of the Navy to monitor the assignment of large individual maintenance projects closely and continue to administer depot maintenance programs to avoid unintended imbalances in workload distribution insofar as practicable.

Management of depot employees (sec. 312)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 332) that would prohibit the management of depot employees by endstrength constraints.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Extension of authority for aviation depots and naval shipyards to engage in defense-related production and services (sec. 313)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 312) that would extend through fiscal year 1996 the authority provided by section 1425 of the National Defense Authorization Act of 1991, as amended, for naval shipyards and aviation depots of all the services to bid on defense-related production and services.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Modification of notification requirement regarding use of core logistics functions waiver (sec. 314)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 374) that would modify section 2464(b) to title 10, United States Code, concerning notification to Congress regarding the effective date of the subject waiver.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Subtitle C—Environmental Provisions

Revision of requirements for agreements for services under the defense environmental restoration program (sec. 321)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 321) that would amend section 2701(d) of title 10, United States Code, to ensure Department of Defense accountability for reimbursements provided to states or territories. The Senate amendment would limit the basis for state reimbursement. First, states or territories participating in agreements under the defense environmental restoration program would only receive reimbursement for providing technical and scientific services. Second, the provision would require the submission of a reprogramming request for amounts in excess of $5.0 million.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would increase the funding authorization to $10.0 million.

Addition of amounts creditable to the defense environmental remediation account (sec. 322)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 322) that would provide for transfer account credit of amounts recovered under section 107 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 (CERCLA) (42 U.S.C. 9601, et. seq.) or from other reimbursements to the Department of Defense for environmental restoration activities.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with a technical amendment.

Sense of Congress on use of defense environmental restoration account (sec. 323)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 326) that would express the sense of Congress that by the end of fiscal year 1997 no more than 20 percent of the annual funding for the Defense Environmental Restoration Account should be spent for administration, support, studies, and investigations.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would establish a goal that by the end of fiscal year 1997 no more than 20 percent of the annual funding for the Defense Environmental Restoration Account should be spent for administration, support, studies, and investigations. The amendment would also require the Department of Defense to submit a report to Congress by April 1, 1996. The report would specify issues related to attaining the 20 percent goal.

Revision of authorities relating to restoration advisory boards (sec. 324)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 323) that would amend section 2705 of title 10, United States Code, which authorizes establishment of restoration advisory boards (RABs) to assist the Department of Defense with environmental restoration activities at military installations. Section 2705 also provides a funding framework for local community members of RABs and existing technical review committees.

About 200 Restoration Advisory Boards have been established at operational and closing installations and formerly used defense sites. Under current law, the RAB funding sources for local community member participation and for technical assistance are the Defense Environmental Restoration Account (DERA) and the Base Realignment and Closure Account (BRAC). Section 2705(e)(3)(B) provides a $7.5 million limit on the use of DERA and BRAC funds to pay for RAB technical assistance and community participation in fiscal year 1995. Under section 2705(d)(3), routine administrative expenses for RABs may be paid out of funds available for the operation and maintenance of an installation, without any limit on the amount of funds that may be expended for that purpose.

The Senate amendment would amend section 2705 to limit funding sources to BRAC and DERA, not to exceed $4.0 million in fiscal year 1996. Funds would be made available only for routine administrative expenses and technical assistance. The installation commander could obtain technical assistance for a RAB to interpret scientific and engineering issues related to the environmental restoration activities at the installation where the RAB is functioning.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would increase the funding authorization to $6.0 million. As part of the amendment, the conferees have included language that would make funds unavailable after September 15, 1996, unless the Secretary of Defense publishes proposed final or interim final regulations. Based on section 2705(d)(2) of title 10, United States Code, the conferees anticipate that the Department would already have made some progress in the promulgation of regulations.

Funding for private sector sources of technical assistance would be contingent on the following: (1) a demonstration that the existing technical resources of the Federal, state, and local agencies responsible for overseeing environmental restoration at an installation could not serve the objective for which technical assistance is requested; or (2) outside assistance is likely to contribute to the efficiency, effectiveness, or timeliness of environmental restoration at an installation; and (3) outside assistance is likely to contribute to community acceptance of environmental restoration activities at an installation.

The conferees intend that the funds authorized pursuant to this section would be the primary funding source for technical assistance and administrative expenses associated with RABs. The conferees strongly encourage the Secretary of Defense to ensure that funds authorized for RABs are expended in a manner that is consistent with obtaining technical assistance and with payment of administrative expenses, and is dispensed in accordance with the funding mechanism established in this section. The RAB program should not serve as a drain on the Superfund.

Discharge from vessels of the Armed Forces (sec. 325)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 322) that would address incidental discharges from vessels of the armed forces through the development of uniform national discharge standards. The Federal Water Pollution Control Act, 33 U.S.C. 1251 et seq., and implementing regulations currently exempt incidental vessel discharges from permitting requirements. Incidental discharges remain subject to varying state regulation. The lack of uniformity has presented operational problems for the Navy.

The Senate amendment is modeled after section 312 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, 33 U.S.C. 1322, which establishes uniform national discharge standards for sewage discharges from all vessels. The standards provision would extend this model to regulate non-sewage incidental discharges from vessels of the armed forces.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Subtitle D—Commissaries and Nonappropriated Fund Instrumentalities

Operation of commissary system (sec. 331)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 341) that would revise the operation of the commissary store system, allow contracts with other agencies, and revise payments to vendor agents.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would eliminate the revision of payments to vendor agents.

The conferees are concerned about the high cost of the Defense Finance and Accounting Service procedures to process the 1.5 million annual commissary invoices. The conferees believe that innovative practices need to be pursued to reduce this burden. The administrative costs consume funding that could otherwise be used to improve patron services or reduce costs.

The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to conduct a review of innovative practices to reduce this cost. Included in this review should be an examination of the relationship between the current distribution and invoicing practices. The Secretary of Defense should report to the Senate Committee on Armed Services and the House Committee on National Security by February 15, 1996 on the recommended actions, if any, to reduce these costs and how any savings will be used.

Additionally, the conferees note that the Defense Commissary Information System and the Point-of-Sale Modernization programs are essentially off-the-shelf commercial grocery systems designed to improve patron service and increase efficiency of commissary operations. As such, the conferees believe the Secretary of Defense should get these systems on line and operating with the minimum of review required to ensure interface with other government data systems and compliance with legislation and regulations essential to protect the interests of the government.

Limited release of commissary store sales information to manufacturers, distributors, and other vendors doing business with Defense Commissary Agency (sec. 332)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 343) that would amend the procedures for the release of commissary stores sales information.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Economical distribution of distilled spirits by nonappropriated fund instrumentalities (sec. 333)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 344) that would amend the procedures for the determination of the most economical distribution of distilled spirits.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with a technical amendment.

Transportation by commissaries and exchanges to overseas locations (sec. 334)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 345) that would allow officials responsible for the operation of commissaries and military exchanges the authority to negotiate directly with private carriers for the most cost-effective transportation of supplies by sea, without relying on the Military Sealift Command or the Military Traffic Management Command.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Demonstration project for uniform funding of morale, welfare, and recreation activities at certain military installations (sec. 335)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 346) that would require the Secretary of Defense to conduct a demonstration program at six military installations under which funds appropriated for the support of morale, welfare, and recreation programs at the installations are combined with nonappropriated funds available for these programs and treated as nonappropriated funds.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment which would extend the test to two years.

Operation of combined exchange and commissary stores (sec. 336)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 347) that would permit the continued operation of the base exchange mart at Fort Worth Naval Air Station, Texas, and would allow for the expansion of the Base Exchange Mart Program.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with a clarifying amendment.

The conferees approve this expansion with the understanding that they do not intend that exchange marts replace viable commissaries. When a commissary is identified for closure, the exchange system will be permitted to conduct a market survey to determine the viability of an exchange mart in the closing commissary facility. The conferees do not expect that an exchange mart would be in direct competition with a commissary operating in close proximity to a proposed exchange mart.

The conferees expect that exchange marts will operate in a manner in which nonappropriated funds are not required to sustain their operation. The conferees expect that every effort will be made to operate the exchange marts in a manner which requires only a minimal amount of appropriated fund support.

Deferred payment programs of military exchanges (sec. 337)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 348) that would require the Secretary of Defense to establish a uniform exchange credit program that could use commercial banking institutions to fund and operate the deferred payment programs of the Army and Air Force Exchange Service and the Navy Exchange Service.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would clarify the provision by ensuring that any proposal be competitively awarded and that prior to entering into any commercial program the Secretary determine that it is in the best interests of the exchange systems.

Availability of funds to offset expenses incurred by Army and Air Force Exchange Service on account of troop reductions in Europe (sec. 338)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 349) that would require that the Secretary of Defense transfer not more than $70 million to the Army and Air Force Exchange Service to offset expenses incurred by the Army and Air Force Exchange Service on account of reductions in the number of military personnel in Europe.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with a technical amendment.

In order to avoid disruption of operations associated with currency fluctuations and, in recognition of the unique direct appropriation nature of commissaries as an entity of the Defense Business Operations Fund, the conferees direct that the military exchanges, other nonappropriated fund instrumentalities, and commissaries be permitted to be included in the Department of Defense foreign currency fluctuation fund.

Associated with the drawdown in Europe was an initiative to transfer operations of the Stars and Stripes Bookstores to the military exchanges. This transfer has a residual impact upon certain employees. The conferees direct that the Army and Air Force Exchange Service accept responsibility for resolving the issue of employment, severance, and back pay for the 15 local national employees formerly employed by the Stars and Stripes. The conferees expect that the Army and Air Force Exchange Service can, in conjunction with the Army and Air Force headquarters in Europe, resolve the current job action concerning these 15 local national employees using funds provided in this section.

Study regarding improving efficiencies in operation of military exchanges and other morale, welfare, and recreation activities and commissary stores (sec. 339)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 350) that would require the Secretary of Defense to conduct a study and submit a report to Congress regarding the manner in which greater efficiencies can be achieved in the operation of military exchanges, commissary stores, and other morale, welfare, and recreation activities.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees agree with the findings and scope of the study called for in the House report (H. Rept 104–131). The conferees believe that the Department of Defense should seek opportunities to reduce labor costs in resale activities and to reduce excessive overhead. Additionally, the conferees agree that significant economies and revenue potential can be realized in the area of management and oversight of overseas slot machine operations. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense consider and, if appropriate, submit a plan to have one service serve as the executive agent for the consolidated management and operation of this function.

Repeal of requirement to convert ships' stores to nonappropriated fund instrumentalities (sec. 340)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 351) that would extend, to December 31, 1996, the deadline for the conversion of all Navy ships' stores to operate as nonappropriated fund activities.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 373) that would repeal section 371 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1994 (Public Law 103-160) requiring the Navy to convert ships' stores operations to a Navy Exchange System agency.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the Inspector General of the Department of Defense to complete a review of the Navy Audit Agency report regarding the conversion of the Ships Stores pursuant to section 374 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1995 (Public Law 103-337).

Disposition of excess morale, welfare, and recreation (MWR) funds (sec. 341)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 371) that would amend section 373 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1995 to permit the Marine Corps to retain the MWR funds transferred from Marine Corps installations.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Clarification of entitlement to use of morale, welfare, and recreation facilities by members of Reserve components and dependents (sec. 342)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 633) that would amend section 1065 of title 10, United States Code, to give members of the retired reserve who would be eligible for retired pay but for the fact that they are under 60 years of age the same priority of use of morale, welfare, and recreation facilities of the military services as members who retired after active duty careers.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Subtitle E—Performance of Functions by Private-Sector Sources

Competitive procurement of printing and duplication services (sec. 351)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 359) that would direct the Defense Printing Service to procure at least 70 percent of printing and duplication work competitively.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would exempt classified printing and duplication work from this calculation.

Direct vendor delivery system for consumable inventory items of Department of Defense (sec. 352)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 360) that would require the Department of Defense (DOD) to arrange for delivery of consumable inventory items directly from vendors to military installations in the United States. Complete implementation of this system would be required by September 30, 1997.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require DOD to use direct vendor delivery of consumable inventory items whenever practicable.

Payroll, finance, and accounting functions of the Department of Defense (sec. 353)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 362) that would require the Secretary of Defense to submit a plan to Congress for the privatization of the payroll functions for civilian employees of the Department of Defense and to implement the plan not later than October 1, 1996.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 368) that would require the Secretary of Defense to conduct a pilot program to test and evaluate the cost savings and efficiencies of private operation of accounting and payroll functions of nonappropriated fund instrumentalities of the Department of Defense.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 352) that would require the department of Defense to conduct a review of the need for further expansion of Defense Finance and Accounting Service (DFAS) operating locations, and to report to the appropriate committees of the Congress prior to establishing any new DFAS operating locations.

The House recedes with an amendment that would combine and clarify the three provisions.

Demonstration program to identify overpayments made to vendors (sec. 354)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 363) that would require the Secretary of Defense to conduct a demonstration program at the Defense Personnel Support Center, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, to evaluate the feasibility of using private contractors to audit accounting and procurement records of the Department of Defense.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Pilot program on private operation of defense dependents' schools (sec. 355)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 364) that would allow the Secretary of Defense to conduct a pilot program to assess the feasibility of using private contractors to operate overseas dependents' schools and to report the results of the pilot program to Congress.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Program for improved travel process for the Department of Defense (sec. 356)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 365) that would require the Secretary of Defense to conduct a pilot program including two prototype tests of commercial travel applications to improve management of the Department of Defense Travel System.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would direct the Secretary to conduct a two-year test at a minimum of three sites and a maximum of six sites, and to report to the Senate Committee on Armed Services and the House Committee on National Security at the conclusion of the first year.

The conferees do not intend this provision to be viewed as authority for the Secretary of Defense to circumvent the requirement for civilians to use adequate government quarters where they are available.

Increases reliance on private-sector sources for commercial products and services (sec. 357)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 367) that would require the Secretary of Defense to endeavor to obtain products and services from the private sector. The provision would require the Secretary of Defense to describe functions that can be performed by the private sector and specify impediments to outsourcing.

The Senate amendment contained no provision (sec 386) that would require the Secretary to report on the use of private sector contractors to perform functions not essential to the warfighting mission of the Department of Defense

The Senate recedes with an amendment.

The conferees agree that DOD should make a maximum effort to rely upon the private sector for commercial functions whenever the same level of service can be obtained at a reduced cost to the government, and the national security does not require the activity to be retained in-house. The conferees note with approval the many steps the Department has already taken in this direction and encourage the Department to continue in its efforts. The conferees urge the Department to maintain close coordination with the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate and the Committee on National Security of the House regarding its efforts to downsize the federal government while placing greater reliance upon the private sector.

Subtitle F—Miscellaneous Reviews, Studies, and Reports

Quarterly readiness reports (sec. 361)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 371) that would require the Secretary of Defense to report quarterly to the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate and the Committee on National Security of the House of Representatives on the military readiness of the armed forces.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Restatement of requirement for semiannual reports to Congress on transfers from high-priority readiness appropriations (sec. 362)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 373) that would amend section 361 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1995 in order to provide more detailed guidance on the report required.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with a clarifying amendment. The conferees are disappointed that the Department of Defense has not been sufficiently thorough in reporting on transfers from high-priority readiness appropriations and expect future reports to be more substantive.

Report regarding reduction of costs associated with contract management oversight (sec. 363)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 376) that would require the Comptroller General to submit a report to Congress that would identify methods to reduce the cost of Department of Defense management and oversight of contracts in connection with major defense acquisition programs.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Reviews of management of inventory control points and Material Management Standard System (sec. 364)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 391) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to conduct a review regarding consolidation of all inventory control points (ICP) under the Defense Logistics Agency. The provision would also prohibit implementation of the Materiel Management Standard System (MMSS) until submission of the Secretary's report to the Congressional defense committees.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary to report by March 31, 1996, on the advisability of consolidating all ICP. The General Accounting Office would review the Secretary's report, and review the MMSS. The amendment would not impose a restriction on implementation of the MMSS.

Report on private performance of certain functions performed by military aircraft (sec. 365)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 390) that would require the Secretary of Defense to report on the feasibility of meeting requirements of VIP transportation, airlift, air cargo, in-flight refueling and other functions by using private contractors in lieu of military aircraft.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Strategy and report on automated information systems of Department of Defense (sec. 366)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 375) that would prohibit the Secretary of Defense from obligating or expending amounts greater than $2.4 billion for the development and modernization of automated data processing programs pending a report by the Inspector General of the Department of Defense (DOD).

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would remove the restriction on obligation of funds. The conferees believe that off-the-shelf automated information systems can improve DOD property management. This includes software, laminate barcode printers, barcode readers, and storage devices.

The conferees also endorse the requirement contained in Title III of the House report (H. Rept. 104–131) in a paragraph of the Items of Special Interest section, entitled "Off-the-shelf systems". The conferees direct the Secretary to include in this report a discussion of functional processes that can use existing private sector technology.

Subtitle G—Other Matters

Codification of Defense Business Operations Fund (sec. 371)

The House bill contained several provisions pertaining to the Defense Business Operations Fund (DBOF).

Section 311 would modify DBOF by adding or precluding various DBOF activities. The provision would also require certain costs to be included in DBOF charges, and revise the capital purchase authority threshold from $50,000 to $15,000. Further, the provision would extend discretionary authority to the Secretary of Defense or the Secretary of a military department to purchase goods and services from non-DBOF activities, if they are available at a more competitive rate.

Section 312 would require the Secretary of Defense to manage DBOF under the immediate authority of the Under Secretary of Defense (Comptroller). This would include central management of cash balances. The provision would also prohibit further expansion of the DBOF by adding new functions, activities, funds or accounts to the DBOF.

Section 313 would require the inclusion of the costs of military personnel, who perform duty in industrial fund activities, in determining costs in DBOF activities. The provision would also terminate the practice of billing in advance for goods and services provided through the DBOF.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provisions.

The Senate recedes with a single amendment that would codify DBOF, but amend the activities listed in the House bill (sec. 312), not revise the capital purchase threshold, and retain the prohibition on further expansion.

The amendment also would direct the Comptroller General of the United States to determine the advisability of managing DBOF at the Department of Defense (DOD) level. The conferees recommend the defense committees review this matter in fiscal year 1996 and consider the advisability of central management in light of the Comptroller General's report and improvements in the condition of the DBOF.

The amendment would permit advance billing for compelling reasons, but require DOD to notify the defense committees of the Congress after September 30, 1996 in the event the aggregate total of advance billing exceeds $100.0 million subsequent to enactment of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1996. Another report would be required each time the aggregate amount of advance billing increases by $100.0 million after the date of the preceding report.

The conferees previously expressed support for the DOD plan to eliminate advance billing in fiscal year 1995 in the conference report accompanying the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1995. The practice of advance billing appears to cause DBOF customers to refrain from purchasing goods and services and it appears to promote confusion, rather than good business, at the unit or installation level.

The conferees also support the effort to capture total costs in order to conduct business operations in accordance with generally accepted business practices. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to annotate the justification books accompanying subsequent budget submissions for DBOF activities, to reflect the total costs for both military and civilian personnel. These costs should include items such as salaries, benefits, and retirement plans. The conferees believe it is necessary for Congress to evaluate the consequences of including such costs in DBOF rates and pricing.

Clarification of services and property exchanged to benefit the historical collection of the armed forces (sec. 372)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 321) that would clarify the law concerning the exchange of services and property for the benefit of the historical collection of the armed services.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Prohibition on capital lease for Defense Business Management University (sec. 373)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 381) that would prohibit the use of funds for any lease with respect to the Center for Financial Management Education and Training of the Defense Business Management University (DBMU) if the lease would be treated as a capital lease for budgetary purposes.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 351) that would require the Secretary of Defense to certify the need for the Center for Financial Management Education and Training of the DBMU, and report on Department of Defense financial management training, 90 days prior to obligating funds for a capital lease.

The Senate recedes.

Permanent authority for use of proceeds from the sale of certain lost, abandoned, or unclaimed property (sec. 374)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 388) that would provide permanent authority for a successful demonstration program for the disposal of certain personal property.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 383) that would provide similar permanent authority, but would provide further authority to credit the operation and maintenance account of a relevant installation for the costs incurred to collect, transport, store, protect, or sell such property. Net proceeds from a sale would be covered into the Treasury. A mechanism for subsequent claims by an owner, heir, etc., would also be provided.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Sale of military clothing and subsistence and other supplies of the Navy and Marine Corps (sec. 375)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 393) that would provide to Navy and Marine Corps personnel the same authority that Army an Air Force personnel currently have to purchase replacement subsistence and other supplies.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 384).

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Personnel services and logistical support for certain activities held on military installations (sec. 376)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 385) that would clarify the authority of the Secretary of Defense in regard to jamborees conducted by the Boy Scouts of America on military installations.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Retention of Monetary awards (sec. 377)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 386) that would permit the Secretary of Defense to accept any monetary award for excellence, given to the Department of Defense by a nongovernmental entity, as an award in a competition recognizing excellence or innovation in providing services or administering programs. Such an award would be credited to the appropriation of the command, installation, or activity that is recognized in the award, as provided in appropriation act. Not more than 50 percent of the monetary award may be disbursed to the persons who are responsible for earning the award, up to $10.0 thousand per person.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would permit the Secretary to accept such monetary awards and disburse the award to the morale, welfare, and recreation nonappropriated fund account of the command, installation, or activity involved in earning the award. Certain incidental expenses could be reimbursed from the award amount.

Provision of equipment and facilities to assist in emergency response actions (sec. 378)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 383) that would amend section 372 of title 10, United States Code, to authorize the Department of Defense to provide assistance in the form of training facilities, sensors, protective clothing, antidotes, and other materials and expertise to appropriate federal, state, or local law enforcement agencies for responding to emergencies involving chemical or biological agents.

The Senate amendment did not contain a similar provision.

The Senate recedes with a technical amendment.

Department of Defense military and civil defense preparedness to respond to emergencies resulting from a chemical, biological, radiological, or nuclear attack (sec. 379)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 223) that would require the Secretaries of the Departments of Defense and Energy, in consultation with the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), to submit a report to Congress that would describe the military and civil defense plans and programs to respond to the use of chemical, biological, nuclear, and radiological agents or weapons against a civilian population located in the United States or near a U.S. military installation.

The House bill did not contain a similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment.

Office of Economic Adjustment

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 304) that would increase the amount of funds available to the Office of Economic Adjustment by $1.5 million.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Annual proposed budget for operation of defense business operations fund

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 314) that would require that the budget request for the Department of Defense include the amount of funds necessary to cover the operating losses of the Defense Business Operations Fund for the previous year.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Reduction in requests for transportation funded through Defense Business Operations Fund

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 315) that would direct a reduction in requests for purchasing transportation through the Defense Business Operations Fund during fiscal year 1996 by $70.0 million from the amount purchased in fiscal year 1995. The provision would also require a report on achieving certain efficiencies.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees are concerned about the amount of overhead carried by the Department of Defense (DOD) to support its transportation infrastructure. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to submit a report to Congress by March 1, 1996. The Secretary should address changes to the transportation infrastructure and implementation of consolidation proposals, such as the elimination of duplication in component command structure. The Secretary should also address measures to reduce transportation overhead without adversely affecting operational and mobilization requirements. The conferees recommend a $70.0 million reduction in anticipation of savings from improvements and efficiencies.

Repeal of certain environmental education programs

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 323) that would repeal sections 1333 and 1334 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1994 (Public Law 103–160; 10 U.S.C. 2701, note).

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Repeal of limitation on obligation of amounts transferred from environmental restoration transfer account

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 324) that would eliminate the statutory's "fence" that precludes the transfer of funds from the Defense Environmental Restoration Account (DERA) for purposes unrelated to environmental remediation.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Elimination of authority to transfer amounts for toxicological profiles

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 325) that would amend section 2704 of title 10, United States Code. The provision would eliminate authority for the Department of Defense to use Defense Environmental Restoration Account funds to reimburse the Agency for Toxic Substance and Disease Registry (ATSDR), a branch of the U.S. Public Health Service. Reimbursement is currently provided to ATSDR for performing statutorily required health assessments and health risk studies at Defense installations listed on the National Priorities List (NPL).

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Pricing policies for commissary store merchandise

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 342) that would reduce administrative costs in pricing commissary merchandise.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees recognize that there may be potential savings for the Defense Commissary Agency (DeCA) if variable pricing was permitted. Therefore, the conferees direct that the Secretary of Defense submit a report to the Senate Committee on Armed Services and the House Committee on National Security not later than May 1, 1996 describing how a variable pricing policy would be implemented; the estimated savings, if any; the impact on customers and suppliers; and a recommended legislative proposal, if appropriate.

Procurement of electricity from most economical source

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 357) that would require the Department of Defense (DOD) to procure electricity from the most economical source.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees direct the Department of Defense to consult with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) on methods to obtain lower prices for the electricity procured by the DOD, including procurement of such electricity through competitive sources. Decisions with regard to procurement of electricity by the DOD and the FERC should take into consideration the cost savings potential to the DOD and the recovery of the specific cost of utility investment that is directly attributable to existing arrangements and understandings with the DOD.

The conferees direct the Department of Defense to submit a report to Congress by March 1, 1996 on the feasibility of attaining the most economical price for electricity under existing statutes. In addition, the DOD shall report on all legislative or regulatory impediments to procuring electricity from the most economical source and the potential cost savings inherent to the elimination of such impediments. The report shall also identify those bases or facilities that are in the best position to use competitive sources of electricity.

Procurement of certain commodities from most economical source

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 358) that would enable the Department of Defense (DOD) to procure commodities from a source other than the General Services Administration (GSA) if the source can provide the commodities at a lower cost.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees are aware that the requirement for DOD to purchase commodities from GSA denies DOD the flexibility to pursue good business practices by preventing DOD from procuring items at the lowest cost. This inflexibility seems to run counter to the desire of Congress, and it does not promote good business practices within DOD. Encouraging managers at all levels to make sound business decisions is an underlying fundamental of the Defense Business Operations Fund concept.

The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to report to the congressional defense committees by March 1, 1995, regarding the advisability of obtaining the authority to bypass GSA. The Secretary should identify any statutory relief necessary.

Private operation of functions of Defense Reutilization and Marketing Service

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 361) that would require the Secretary of Defense to solicit for performance, by commercial entities, of selected functions of the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Service (DRMS). The provision would require the Secretary to report on those functions that should continue to be performed by Department of Defense (DOD) civilian employees not later than July 1, 1996.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees expect the Secretary to address the privatization of DRMS functions as part of the DOD-wide review and report, regarding increased reliance on private sector sources for commercial products and services, required elsewhere in this bill.

Pilot program for private operation of consolidated information technology functions of Department of Defense

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 366) that would require the Secretary of Defense to enter into negotiations for contracting-out the workload of three Defense Megacenters. This effort would serve as a three-year pilot program to determine the advisability of having this type of work performed by the private sector. The goal of the program would be to achieve savings of at least 35 percent over current practices. Further consolidation of megacenters, to fewer than the 16 currently identified, would be prohibited until completion of the pilot program.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees believe there is significant potential to make improvements in the efficiency and effectiveness of the Department of Defense (DOD) data processing operations, to include the data megacenters. The conferees also believe there may be significant potential to achieve savings from contracting-out work that is not military-essential or otherwise unique to government. However, judgments on the advantages of contracting-out work should be based on economic and mission analyses, which the DOD has not performed.

The conferees direct the Secretary to submit a report on this matter to the defense committees by May 31, 1996. The report should include: the rationale for contracting-out work; an analysis of the costs and benefits of contracting-out a portion of the workload; a detailed description of information technology functions and services performed by megacenters that are not considered military essential; and the amount of savings anticipated to be achieved by contracting-out. The conferees note that functions considered to be military-essential, and those that pertain to information security, military readiness, certain aspects of training, and warfighting, are not required to be addressed in this report.

Authority of Inspector General over investigations of procurement fraud

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 382) that would consolidate responsibility for all investigations of procurement fraud within the Department of Defense under the Inspector General.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. Under the Inspector General Act of 1978, as amended, the overall responsibility for investigations within the DOD, including procurement fraud investigations, rests with the Inspector General. The Inspector General has full authority to investigate any allegations of procurement fraud involving a DOD contractor. Day-to-day responsibility for the conduct of procurement fraud investigations is divided among the investigative organizations of the Department of Defense and each of the military departments. The Inspector General also has full authority to assume responsibility for any procurement fraud investigation initiated by one or more of the military departments.

The Defense Advisory Board on the Investigative Capabilities of the DOD unanimously recommended that fraud investigations be consolidated into the Office of the Inspector General. The recommendation was based on several objectives that would include eliminating joint investigations, eliminating confusion over joint investigations, and increasing the capability to identify multiple acts of fraud by the same contractors.

The conferees note that there have been continuing concerns about duplication and coordination between the Department of Defense Inspector General and the investigative components of the military departments with respect to major procurement fraud investigations. The conferees agree that the Department must endeavor to concentrate procurement fraud efforts on investigations rather than jurisdictional disputes. Therefore, the conferees believe that the Secretary of Defense should make every effort to ensure that this important function is performed in the most efficient and effective manner, avoiding the necessity for joint investigations to the maximum extent practicable.

The conferees are encouraged to note that the Department recently established a coordinating council, headed by the DOD Inspector General, to address some of the concerns raised by the Defense Advisory Board. To ensure the effectiveness of the new procedures, the conferees direct that the Secretary review the newly constituted Secretary's Board on Investigations, with a particular emphasis on maximizing the efficiency and effectiveness of major procurement fraud investigations. As part of this review, the Secretary should assess: (1) the optimal level of resources required to ensure a robust oversight function within the Department; (2) which DOD investigative components should conduct procurement fraud investigations; and (3) the optimal organization required to increase the DOD capability to maximize procurement fraud recoveries and indictments.

The conferees direct the Secretary to provide a report by May 1, 1996, to the congressional defense committees on the results of this review. The conferees will assess this report to ascertain whether further legislation is necessary to address remaining concerns over duplication and coordination problems among the DOD investigative components.

Transfer of excess personal property to support law enforcement activities

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 389) that would amend section 1208(a)(1)(A) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 1990 and 1991, concerning the transfer of excess personal property. This provision would expand current authority to permit the Secretary of Defense to transfer excess property to state and other federal agencies for use in law enforcement activities. Current authority contained in the above section addresses only transfers to such agencies for their use in counter-drug activities.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees note that numerous avenues currently exist to transfer excess property to state and other federal agencies, including law enforcement agencies which do not have explicit counternarcotics responsibilities. However, there appears to be no coherent policy, priority, or central data base which allows such agencies to learn what is available at a given time, or to effect a transfer without inordinate administrative work.

The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to review this matter and report to the defense committees of the Congress not later than March 30, 1996, on developing a comprehensive policy and establishing procedures which would assist state and federal law enforcement agencies in identifying and obtaining such equipment. The Secretary should consider Memoranda of Understanding as a means to effect transfers.

The Secretary should also give high priority consideration to state and federal law enforcement agencies that demonstrate their need for such equipment.

Development and implementation of innovative processes to improve operation and maintenance

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 390) that would direct that $350.0 million, of the funds authorized and appropriated for defense-wide operation and maintenance, be available for the development or acquisition of information technologies and reengineered functional processes.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Sale of 50 percent of current war reserve fuel stocks and prepositioned war reserves

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 392) that would require the Secretary of Defense to reduce war reserve fuel stocks of the Department of Defense to a level equal to 50 percent of the level of such stocks on January 1, 1995.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees believe that the DOD has made considerable progress in identifying its fuel requirements necessary for wartime operations. This has led to a reduction in the required level of war reserves. The conferees urge the DOD to continue its efforts in this area in order to save money while maintaining military readiness.

The conferees further believe that there is considerable opportunity to address critical afloat and ashore war reserve deficiencies. The conferees agree to add $60 million for purchases of critical war reserve stocks. This funding is authorized in the operation and maintenance, defense-wide activities account for application to high priority war reserve requirements. The Secretary of Defense is requested to report on the expenditure of these funds to the congressional defense committees prior to their allocation and should seek the views of theater commanders-in-chief in determining the application of these resources.

Southwest border states anti-drug information system

The House bill included a provision (sec. 396) that indicated that the Southwest Border States Anti-Drug Information Systems program is an important element of the Department of Defense support of law enforcement agencies in the fight against illegal trafficking of narcotics.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The Southwest Border States Anti-Drug Information System is addressed elsewhere in this statement of managers.

Elimination of certain restrictions on purchases and sales of items by exchange stores and other morale, welfare, and recreation (MWR) facilities

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 372) that would eliminate the cost, price, size, and country of origin limitations on purchases and sales of items sold in the military exchanges and morale, welfare, and recreation facilities.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Funding for Troops to Teachers and Troops to Cops Programs

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 388) that would authorize $42.0 million for the Troops-to-Teachers program and $10.0 million for the Troops-to-Cops program from amounts authorized for military personnel for fiscal year 1996.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees recognize that these programs address the economic dislocation among service members caused by the defense drawdown. Therefore, the conferees invite the Department of Defense to determine whether use of existing resources, if available, is appropriate to continue these programs.

Authorization of amounts requested in the budget for Junior ROTC

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 389) that would restore the authorization to fund Junior Reserve Officer's Training Corps (JROTC) at the budget request.

The House bill authorized the JROTC program at the budget request.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees agree to authorize the JROTC program at the budget request.

Use of commissary stores by members of the ready reserve

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 631) that would permit members of the ready reserve to use commissaries on the same basis as members on active duty.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Use of commissary stores by retired reserves under age 60 and their survivors

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 632) that would permit survivors of "gray area" retirees, members of the retired reserve who have not attained the age of 60 years, to use commissaries as if the sponsor had attained 60 years of age and was receiving retirement benefits.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

TITLE IV—MILITARY PERSONNEL AUTHORIZATIONS

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Minimum force structure levels for Navy Light Airborne Multipurpose System helicopters

The conferees note that the Navy Light Airborne Multipurpose System (LAMPS) antisubmarine warfare helicopter fleet provides an essential element to the Nation's overall antisubmarine warfare capability. The conferees understand that the Navy has no plans to reduce the number of active or reserve LAMPS squadrons below the 14 currently in the force structure during fiscal years 1996 or 1997. The conferees believe that 14 LAMPS squadrons is the minimum structure necessary and fully expect the Navy to continue to support that level of force structure.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Subtitle A—Active Forces

End strengths for active forces (sec. 401)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 401) that would establish active duty end strengths for fiscal year 1996.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 401), but would include an increase of 340, of which 65 would be officers, in Navy end strength to permit the Navy to retain an active P-3 squadron scheduled for inactivation in fiscal year 1996.

The following table summarizes the authorized active duty end strengths for fiscal year 1996.

	Fiscal year
	1995 Authorization	1996 Request	1996 Recommendation
Army:
Total	510,000	495,000	495,000

Navy:
Total	441,641	428,000	428,340
Officer		58,805	58,870
Marine Corps:
Total	174,000	174,000	174,000

Total	1,525,692	1,485,200	1,485,540
Officer		234,011	234,076

The House bill also contained a provision (sec. 521) that would establish permanent end strength levels beginning in fiscal year 1996.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would integrate the House bill provision (sec. 521) into this section.

Temporary variation in DOPMA authorized end strength limitations for active duty Air Force and Navy officers in certain grades (sec. 402)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 402) that would authorize a temporary increase in the number of officers who can serve on active duty in the grade of major in the Air Force and in the grades of lieutenant commander, commander, and captain in the Navy until September 30, 1997.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 402).

The House recedes.

The conferees fully expect the Secretary of Defense to provide a comprehensive proposal to restructure the authorized strength tables for commissioned officers on active duty in time for the committee to address, in the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1997, a permanent solution to perceived recurring shortages of officers in controlled grades for each service.

Certain general and flag officers awaiting retirement not to be counted (sec. 403)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 403) that would exempt a retiring Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, Chief of Staff of the Army, Chief of Naval Operations, Chief of Staff of the Air Force, or Commandant of the Marine Corps from being included in the number of general and flag officers on active duty, authorized to be serving in the grade of general and admiral, during the period when they would complete those activities necessary to transition to the retired list after they have been relieved from their former position.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

The conferees agree that the five positions in this provision represent the totality of the critical positions for which an exemption of this type is appropriate. The conferees expect that the Department will not request exemptions for any additional general/flag officer positions.

The conferees intend that this authority would not be used for more than 60 calendar days.

Subtitle B—Reserve Forces

End Strengths for Selected Reserve (sec. 411)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 411) that would authorize selected reserve end strength levels for fiscal year 1996.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 411).

The following table summarizes the authorized end strength levels for the selected reserve for fiscal year 1983.

	Fiscal year
	1995 Authorization	1996 Request	1996 Recommendation
The Army National Guard of the United States	400,000	373,000	373,000
The Army Reserve	242,000	230,000	230,000
The Naval Reserve	102,960	98,602	98,894
The Marine Corps Reserve	42,000	42,000	42,274
The Air National Guard of the United States	115,581	109,458	112,707
The Air Force Reserve	78,706	73,969	73,969
The Coast Guard Reserve	8,000	8,000	8,000

The conferees have approved an increase in the Naval Reserve end strength, which reflects the recommendation that the Navy retain one reserve P-3 squadron currently scheduled for inactivation in fiscal year 1996.

The conferees have approved an increase in the Marine Corps Reserve end strength, which reflects the conferees' recommendation that the authorized number or reservists on active duty in support of the Marine Corps Reserve be increased.

The conferees have approved an increase in the Air National Guard end strength, which reflects the conferees' recommendation that the Air Force maintain the PAA squadrons at 15 aircraft per squadron in fiscal year 1996.

End strengths for the Reserves on active duty in support of the Reserves (sec. 412)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 412) that would authorize reserve full-time support end strength levels for fiscal year 1996.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 412).

The following table summarizes the reserve full-time support end strength levels for fiscal year 1996.

	Fiscal year
	1995 authorization	1996 request	1996 recommendation
The Army National Guard of the United States	23,650	23,390	23,390
The Army Reserve	11,940	11,575	11,575
The Naval Reserve	17,510	17,490	17,587
The Marine Corps Reserve	2,285	2,285	2,559
The Air National Guard of the United States	9,389	9,817	10,066
The Air Force Reserve	648	628	628

The conferees have approved an increase in the authorized number of reservists on active duty (AR's) in support of the Marine Corps Reserve. The conferees note that this increase is intended to complement existing active duty support, and is not a substitute for any portion of the active duty support that is part of the Inspector-Instructor system. Therefore, the conferees direct that the Inspector-Instructor support system not be reduced as a result of any AR increase. Further, the conferees direct that the AR increase of 274 personnel be utilized to the extent that it is supported by a specific appropriation. The conferees do not support increasing the AR program if it means reducing any other reserve programs.

The increases in the number of reservists on active duty in support of the Naval Reserve reflects the conferees' approval of additional selected reserve strength to enable the Navy to retain a reserve P-3 squadron.

The increase in the number of reservists on active duty in support of the Air National Guard reflects the conferees' approval of selected reserve strength to enable the Air National Guard to retain the PAA squadrons at 15 aircraft per squadron.

Counting of certain active component personnel assigned in support of Reserve component training (sec. 413)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 413) that would permit active duty personnel assigned to active duty units, that have been and continue to be established for the principal purpose of providing dedicated training support to reserve component units, to be counted toward the number of advisers required by section 414(c) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 1992 and 1993 (Public Law 102-190).

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Increase in the number of members in certain grades authorized to serve on active duty in support of the Reserves (sec. 414)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 413) that would temporarily increase the number of members of certain grades authorized to serve on active duty in support of the reserves.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Reserves on active duty in support of Cooperative Threat Reduction Programs not to be counted (sec. 415)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 414) that would exempt members of a reserve component who participate in Cooperative Threat Reduction Act programs from being counted against the authorized active duty end strength.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Reserves on active duty for military-to-military contacts and comparable activities not to be counted (sec. 416)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 415) that would amend section 168 of title 10 United States Code, to exempt members of a reserve component who participate in activities or programs specified in section 168, for over 180 days, from counting against the end strengths for members of the armed services on active duty, authorized by section 115(a)(1) of title 10, United States Code.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Subtitle C—Military Training Student Loads

Authorization of training student loads (sec. 421)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 421) that would approve the training students loads contained in the President's budget.

The Senate amendment contained an identical provision (sec. 421).

The conference agreement includes this provision.

Subtitle D—Authorization of Appropriations

Authorization for increase in active duty end strengths (sec. 432)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 432) that would authorize $112.0 million in additional funds available for increasing military personnel end strengths within the Department of Defense above those levels requested by the President's budget.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

TITLE V—MILITARY PERSONNEL POLICY

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Funding for the Family Advocacy Program and the New Parent Support Program

The conferees are concerned about the adequacy of funding requested by the Department of Defense for the Family Advocacy Program (FAP) and the lack of funding for the New Parent Support Program (NPSP). The conferees agree to provide an increase of $30.0 million for the FAP and $25.6 for the NPSP. The conferees direct that the NPSP increase be allocated as follows: Army—$10.0 million; Navy—$7.0 million; Marine Corps—$5.0 million; Air Force—$3.6 million. The conferees take this action in response to the significant strains placed on military families as a result of the high operations tempo in all services. The conferees consider the FAP and the NPSP critical to the readiness and retention of quality people.

The conferees recognize that there is fierce competition within the Department of Defense, and among the services, for scarce operations and maintenance funds. The conferees are concerned that the FAP and NPSP funding may be used for other purposes. If the Department or a service attempt to reduce, divert, or reprogram the FAP or NPSP funding for some other purpose, the conferees would consider such an action to be in direct contravention of congressional intent.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS

Legislative provisions adopted

Subtitle A—Officer Personnel Policy

Joint officer management (sec. 501)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 501) that would amend joint officer management policies in four areas: (1) the number of required critical joint duty assignment positions; (2) joint duty assignment credit for certain qualifying joint task force positions; (3) the education and experience sequencing requirement for the award of the joint specialty to general and flag officers; and (4) tour length requirements for certain officers on a second joint tour.

The House bill contained no similar amendment.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

The conferees note that this amendment is intended to provide to the civilian and military leadership of the Department of Defense some flexibility to manage the various joint officer programs, without undermining the fundamental tenets and goals of the Goldwater-Nichols Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1986. Therefore, none of the changes included in the conference agreement should be perceived as diminishing the importance of joint duty assignments or the importance of rigorous preparation before the award of the joint specialty or the need for judicious management of those officers to whom that designator has been awarded. The conferees revised the Department's original proposal to preclude the Department from rapidly rotating officers through joint task force assignments and thereby circumventing the fundamental intent of the Goldwater-Nichols Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1986.

Regarding credit for service in joint task force and multinational force positions, the conferees recognize that certain positions will provide real-world joint experience equal to or greater than that provided by some positions on the Joint Duty Assignment List. Additionally, the conferees believe that authorizing the Secretary of Defense to award joint duty credit for certain officers serving in joint task force positions will permit deserving in-service assignments to receive joint duty assignment credit. The conferees fully expect the Secretary of Defense to closely manage the award of joint duty credit for such positions.

Retired grade for officers in grades above major general and rear admiral (sec. 502)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 505) that would permit the retirement of three- and four-star generals and flag officers to be considered under the same standards and procedures as general and flag officer retirements at the one- and two-star level.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Wearing of insignia for higher grade before promotion (sec. 503)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 507) that would define "frocking" and limit the numbers of officers that could be frocked to grades 0–4 through 0–7.

Frocking is the practice of allowing an officer to wear the insignia of a higher grade prior to appointment to that higher grade. While the Department of Defense has attempted to control the extent of frocking through regulation, the practice remains a means by which the services routinely circumvent the statutory limits on the number of officers authorized to serve in certain grades.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Authority to extend transition period for officers selected for early retirement (sec. 504)

In addition, this section would require the Secretary of Defense, within six months of enactment, to initiate measures to consolidate and streamline management-level headquarters at the National, regional, and state level in the Air Force and Army Reserve and National Guard. This section would also require that, after the date of enactment, only dual-status technicians be hired.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 331) that would establish a floor for military technicians in the Army and Air Force Reserve and National Guard for fiscal years 1996 and 1997.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would establish a floor for military technicians in the Army and Air Force Reserve and National Guard at the House level.

The conferees recognize the critical importance of military technicians to reserve component readiness, and direct the use of end-strength floors to manage this special category of personnel. The conferees urge the Secretary of Defense and the Secretaries of the military departments to provide the requisite funding to ensure that the correct number of qualified military technicians are available to ensure a significant contribution to operational readiness.

As revised, the section would require the Army to annually provide at least 150 officers and 1,000 soldiers, with at least two years prior active duty experience, to national guard units.

This section would also expand the Army selected reserve requirements of sections 1112(b), 1113, 1115, 1116, and 1120 of the Army National Guard Combat Readiness Reform Act of 1992 (title XI, Public Law 102–484).

The provision would establish a one-year period in which award recommendations could be submitted for consideration and existing award review procedures would be used. At the end of one year, the Secretary would be required to report to the Congress on the results on this review.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Procedure for consideration of military decorations not previously submitted in timely fashion (sec. 526)

The conference agreement includes a provision that would establish procedures under which Members of Congress can forward to the secretary of a military department a recommendation for a military award or decoration, including an upgrade of a previously approved award or decoration, for consideration by the Secretary, without regard to time limits established in law or policy. The secretary concerned will make a recommendation concerning the merits of the request to the Senate Committee on Armed Services and the House Committee on National Security.

In accordance with established standards, the conferees believe that the burden and costs for researching and assembling documentation to support approval of requested awards and decorations should rest with the requestor and should not cause an undue administrative burden within the Legislative or Executive Branch.

The conferees note that the Department of Defense has traditionally avoided consideration of requests for review of military awards on the merits by citing the expiration of various time limits. The conferees, in general, do not support the provision of military awards or decorations through private relief bills. The conferees intend that the secretaries' recommendations would be the basis for consideration of a waiver of time limits, if appropriate.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would provide the Secretary discretion in responding to a request from a senior military college.

The conferees expect that the service secretaries will respond positively to any request, from a senior military college, to provide an officer to serve as the commandant or assistant commandant, or as a tactical officer.

Subtitle E—Miscellaneous Reviews, Studies, and Reports

Report concerning appropriate forum for judicial review of Department of Defense personnel actions (sec. 551)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 559) that would establish a panel to examine whether the existing practices with regard to judicial review of DOD administrative personnel actions are appropriate and adequate, whether a centralized judicial review of administrative personnel actions should be established, and whether the United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces should conduct such reviews. This approach has been recommended by the American Bar Association.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the panel to examine whether a single federal court should conduct such reviews, and, if so, which federal court should be assigned that responsibility. The amendment would provide the Secretary of Defense with the responsibility to establish the panel. The conference agreement required that the Secretary consult with the Attorney General and the Chief Justice of the United States concerning appointments to the panel. The conferees also required that the Secretary consult with the Attorney General prior to sending the report to Congress.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 523) that would require the Comptroller General of the United States to determine the extent to which the Army is able to fully man the combat and support forces required to carry out the national security strategy and operations other than war for fiscal years 1996 through 2001.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Report on manning status of highly deployable support units (sec. 553)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 524) that would direct each of the secretaries of the military departments to conduct a study to determine whether high-priority support units, that would deploy early in a crisis, are, as a matter of policy, manned at less than 100 percent of authorized strengths. The provision would further require the secretaries of the military departments to report the findings of their studies not later than September 30, 1996.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Review of system for correction of military records (sec. 554)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 565) that would require the Secretary of Defense to submit a report on the consistency with which fingerprint cards and final disposition forms are reported by the Defense Criminal Investigation Organizations to the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The Senate recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Subtitle F—Other Matters

Equalization of accrual of service credit for officers and enlisted members (sec. 561)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 551) that would make the criteria for accrual of service credit for officers consistent with the criteria established for enlisted members.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 552).

The conference agreement includes this provision.

Army ranger training (sec. 562)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 557) that would establish a baseline number of officers and enlisted personnel that would have to be assigned to the Army Ranger Training Brigade and would give the Secretary of the Army one year to achieve that level. This provision would also require that training safety cells be established in each of the three major phases of the Ranger training course.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment which would require the Ranger Training Brigade to be manned at 90 percent of the requirements for two years, at which time the statutory requirement would expire. The amendment would also require the Comptroller General to assess the effectiveness of corrective actions taken by the Army as a result of the February 1995 accident at the Florida Ranger Training Camp. The amendment also expresses the sense of the Congress that the Secretary of Defense review and enhance, if necessary, oversight of all high-risk training and consider establishment of safety cells similar to those prescribed in the Ranger Training Brigade.

The conferees direct the secretary of defense to undertake a comprehensive analysis of high-risk training activities, to include, but not limited to the following: Army-Ranger; Navy SEAL; Navy and Air Force Survival, Evasion, Resistance, and Escape; and Airborne training. The study should identify key contributing factors prejudicial to personnel safety. This study shall include sensitivity analysis for each high-risk training program, with particular emphasis on officer-enlisted ratios and instructor-student ratios. The conferees direct the Secretary to submit the study results to the Senate Committee on Armed Services and the House Committee on National Security not later than December 31, 1996.

Separation in cases involving extended confinement (sec. 563)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 553) that would authorize the administrative separation of a service member who is sentenced by court-martial to a period of confinement for one year or more.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Sense of Congress concerning personnel tempo rates (sec. 565)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 525) that would express the sense of Congress that the Secretary of Defense should continue to improve the Department's personnel tempo management techniques so that all personnel can expect a reasonable personnel tempo rate.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Separation benefits during force reduction for officers of the commissioned corps of National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (sec. 566)

The Senate recedes.

Discharge of members of the armed forces who have the HIV-1 virus (sec. 567)

Revision and codification of Military Family Act and Military Child Care Act (sec. 568)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 560) that would codify in title 10, United States Code, updated provisions of The Military Family Act of 1985 (title VII, Public Law 99-145), and The Military Child Care Act of 1989 (title XV, Public Law 101-189), which were instrumental in focusing Department of Defense attention on the needs of military families and on the importance of effective child care programs.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would eliminate a reporting requirement.

Determination of whereabouts and status of missing persons (sec. 569)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 563) that would require the Secretary of Defense to centralize at the Department of Defense level, the oversight and policy responsibility for accounting for missing persons.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 551).

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would clarify and integrate the two provisions.

The conferees' intention in requiring the creation of the Office for Missing Persons (section 1501) is that this office will have a broad range of responsibilities that include those of all the individual offices that currently have responsibilities for POW/MIA matters.

The conferees expect that the Secretary of Defense will organize this new office to serve as the single focal point in the Department of Defense for POW/MIA matters and consolidate the formulation and oversight of search, rescue, escape and evasion and accountability policies. The conferees further expect that the Secretary of Defense will make every effort to ensure a close working relationship with the national intelligence agencies.

In relation to the Special Rule for Persons Classified as KIA/BNR, the conferees believe that the evidence referred to in section 1509(c) should be compelling evidence, such as post-incident letters written by the supposedly-dead person while in captivity or United States or other archival evidence that directly contradicts earlier United States Government determinations.

Associate Director of Central Intelligence for Military Support (sec. 570)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1096) that would exempt the position of Associate Director of Central Intelligence for Military Support from counting against the numbers and percentages of officers authorized to be serving in the rank and grade of such officer for the armed force of which such officer is a member when neither the Director for Central Intelligence or the Deputy Director for Central Intelligence is a military officer.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Subtitle G—Support for Non-Department of Defense Activities

Repeal and revision of certain Civil-Military Programs (secs. 571, 572, 573 and 574)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 558) that would repeal the authority for three programs established by the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 (Public Law 102-484): the Civil-Military Cooperative Action Program; the National Guard Youth Opportunities Program; and the Pilot Outreach Program to Reduce the Demand for Illegal Drugs. Additionally, this provision would preclude Department of Defense support to the Civilian Conservation Corps.

The Senate amendment contained several provisions that would address Civil-Military Programs as follows: (1) prohibit the use of funds for the Office of Civil-Military Programs within the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Reserve Affairs (sec. 362); (2) revise section 410 of title 10, United States Code, the Civil-Military Cooperative Action Program (sec. 363); (3) extend the authorization for the National Guard Youth Opportunities Program through Fiscal Year 1997 (sec. 1083); and (4) extend the duration of the Pilot Outreach Program to Reduce the Demand for Illegal Drugs for two additional years (sec. 1099A).

The conference agreement includes several provisions (secs. 571, 572, 573, and 574) that would: (1) replace section 410 of title 10, United States Code, with a new section, that would authorize support and services for certain eligible organizations and activities outside of the Department of Defense (sec. 2012); (2) prohibit the use of funds for the Office of Civil-Military Programs within the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Reserve Affairs or for any other entity within the Office of the Secretary of Defense that has an exclusive or principal mission of providing centralized direction for activities under section 572 of this Act; (3) extend that authorization for the National Guard Youth Opportunities Program for 18 months from enactment and limit the number of programs to the number in effect on September 30, 1995. The Conference Agreement did not extend the duration of the Pilot Outreach Program to Reduce Demand for Illegal Drugs.

Regarding the repeal of specific authority for the Civil-Military Cooperative Program and the absence of an extension of the Pilot Outreach Program to Reduce the Demand for Illegal Drugs, the conferees note that the Young Marines, the Seaborne Conservation Corps, and other programs operated under Department of Defense and service policy prior to the October 1992 enactment of the statutory authorities for the various civil-military programs. The conferees expect that the Young Marines, the Seaborne Conservation Corps and other similar programs should be able to continue operations in accordance with the pre-October 1992 authorities.

The conferees intend that the 18-month extension of the National Guard Youth Opportunities Program would permit these programs to develop non-Department of Defense sources of funding in order to continue operation after the authority in this extension expires.

Regarding support and services for eligible organizations and activities outside of the Department of Defense, the conferees intend that the "custody community relations and public affairs activities", referred to in section 572(b)(1), provide for the use of Department of Defense resources to support public events, including such activities as the honor guards, static displays of equipment, bands, and demonstrations, and rely heavily on volunteer support. Department of Defense resources should be considered available for community relations support only after all military needs have been met. Additionally, the conferees expect that, concerning the exception to the relationship to military training, referred to in section 572(d)(2), most manpower requests for assistance under this exception will be met by volunteers, and that any assistance other than manpower will be extremely limited. With respect to such exception, Government vehicles may be used, but only to provide transportation of military manpower to and from the work site. The use of government aircraft in assistance under this exception is prohibited.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Report on feasibility of providing education benefits protection insurance for service academy and ROTC scholarship students who become medically unable to serve

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 515) that would require the Secretary of Defense to conduct a study on the need and feasibility of establishing a no cost to the government disability insurance plan for service academy and Reserve Officers' Training Corps scholarship students.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees believe that private insurance companies could provide the needed coverage without requiring further study by the Secretary of Defense. Accordingly, the conferees direct the Secretary to cooperate with private insurers and to make insurance information available to students in a manner that the Secretary determines to be essentially consistent with the way private insurance information is handled elsewhere within the Department of Defense.

Authority to appoint Brigadier General Charles E. Yeager, United States Air Force (retired) to the grade of major general on the retired list

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 562) that would authorize the President to advance Brigadier General Charles E. Yeager (retired) to the grade of major general on the retired list.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Subtitle A—Pay and Allowances

Military pay raise for fiscal year 1996 (sec. 601)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 601) that would provide a 2.4 percent military pay raise for all the uniformed services, except the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. Additionally, the provision would increase by 5.2 percent the rates of the basic allowance for quarters for members of the uniformed services. These increases would be effective January 1, 1996.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision that would apply to all uniformed services (sec. 601).

The House recedes.

Limitation on basic allowance for subsistence for members residing without dependents in government quarters (sec. 602)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 602) that would require the secretaries of the military departments to allow no more than 12 percent of the service members without dependents who reside in government quarters to receive basic allowance for subsistence (BAS). The provision would also require the Secretary of Defense to submit a report to confirm the current number of service members in this category and to establish a standard for the appropriate percentage of personnel who are eligible to receive BAS.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Election of basic allowance for quarters instead of assignment to inadequate quarters (sec. 603)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 602) that would authorize payment of the basic allowance for quarters (BAQ) and variable housing allowance (VHA) (and overseas housing allowance (OHA) if assigned overseas) to single members in the paygrade E–6 and above who have been assigned to quarters that do not meet minimum adequacy standards established by the Department of Defense.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Payment of basic allowance for quarters to members in pay grade E–6 who are assigned to sea duty (sec. 604)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 603) that would authorize payment of basic allowance for quarters and variable housing allowance to single E–6 personnel assigned to shipboard sea duty.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 603).

The conference agreement includes this provision.

Limitation on reduction of variable housing allowance for certain members (sec. 605)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 604) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to establish a minimum amount of variable housing allowance (VHA) to meet the cost of adequate housing in high cost areas. The provision would also prevent the reduction of the amount of VHA paid to an individual, as long as the member retains uninterrupted eligibility to receive VHA in the housing area and the member's housing costs are not reduced.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 604) that would prevent reduction of the amount of variable housing allowance (VHA) paid to an individual, as long as the service member retains uninterrupted eligibility to receive VHA in the housing area and the service member's housing costs are not reduced.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

The conferees believe that, if the current mechanism for determining VHA rates is inadequate, the Secretary of Defense should notify the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate and the Committee on National Security of the House. Such notification should include a recommended solution and all appropriate justification.

Clarification of limitation on eligibility for Family Separation Allowance (sec. 606)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 605) that would authorize the payment of family separation allowance to service members on board a ship that is away from homeport, even though the service member elected to remain unaccompanied by dependents at the permanent duty station.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 605) that also authorized payment of family separation allowance when members are on temporary duty away from permanent duty station.

The House recedes.

Subtitle B—Bonuses and Special and Incentive Pays

TITLE VII—HEALTH CARE PROVISIONS

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Follow-on medical care for certain members of former members of the Armed Forces and their dependents

The conferees note that same service members, as a result of receiving transfusions at military hospitals were placed at risk of contracting a serious communicable disease and subsequently transmitting it to their dependents.

The case of Douglas Simon of Eden Prairie, Minnesota, and his family, is an example of the very tragic situation that can arise following a transfusion of contaminated blood. In 1983, while serving in the Army National Guard, Mr. Simon was infected with the AIDS virus after undergoing a blood transfusion at Fort Benning, Georgia. Subsequently, he unknowingly transmitted the virus to his spouse, Nancy, who in turn, transmitted the virus to their daughter Candace. Candace became ill and died of AIDs in 1993 at the age of five. Both Mr. and Mrs. Simon are now in the terminal stages of AIDS and their two remaining children Brian, 11, and Eric, 9, will be orphaned. To date, the Department of Defense has not accepted any financial responsibility for the treatment of Mr. or Mrs. Simon, or the future of the two children. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to review the Department's role in this case and to determine whether the Department of Defense should provide fair compensation to these and other similarly affected persons.

The Senate recedes with a clarifying amendment.

The Senate recedes.

TITLE VIII—ACQUISITION POLICY, ACQUISITION MANAGEMENT, AND RELATED MATTERS

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Ship repair contracts

The conferees are concerned with continued reports that Navy ship repair contractors are not being paid by the prime contractor in a timely manner. The House report accompanying H.R. 1530 (H. Rept. 104–131) addressed this issue by asking the Navy to pursue remedies necessary to ensure that the subcontractor community will be able to support the United States Navy fleet properly. The conferees support this language and urge the Navy to monitor this problem carefully and explore available remedies to ensure that Navy ship repair subcontractors are properly and promptly compensated for their services.

The conferees are similarly concerned with the Navy's practice of bundling ship repair contracts that include only a small number of drydocking requirements within several ship repair availabilities. The conferees are concerned that this may unnecessarily preclude competition for repair work that does not require a drydock. The conferees believe that if the Navy continues to bundle multiyear ship repair contracts that would in part require the use of a drydock, the Navy should give strong consideration to making available, at a reasonable cost, a public drydock, to ensure adequate competition.

Workers compensation coverage on overseas contracts

The conferees agree with the requirement contained in the Senate report (S. Rept. 104–112) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to review the efforts of the State Department and the Agency for International Development to consolidate worker's compensation insurance coverage on overseas contracts. The conferees note that chapter 12 of title 42, United States Code, mandates that all United States citizens and legal permanent residents, employed for any duration by a defense contractor, be covered by uniform worker's compensation insurance.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS

Legislative provisions adopted

Subtitle A—Acquisition Reform

Limitation on expenditure of appropriations (sec. 801)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 821(b)) that would repeal section 2207 of title 10, United States Code.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would apply section 2207 of title 10, United States Code, solely to contracts valued above the simplified acquisition threshold.

Delegation authority (sec. 802)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 806) that would repeal section 2356 of title 10, United States Code, which unnessarily duplicates inherent authority of the Secretary of Defense to delegate research contracting authorities.

The House bill contained an identical provision.

The conference agreement includes this provision.

Critical spare parts (sec. 803)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 821(d)) that would repeal section 2383 of title 10, United States Code, regarding quality requirements for critical spare parts of ships or aircraft. The provision was intended to assist the Department of Defense in shifting from reliance on outdated military specifications and standards to the use of modern industrial manufacturing methods that would ensure quality in critical spare parts.

The Senate amendment contained an identical provision (sec. 809).

The conference agreement includes this provision.

Fees for certain testing services (sec. 804)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 822) that would provide flexibility for the Secretary of Defense to require reimbursement of indirect, as well as direct costs, from private sector uses of Department of Defense testing facilities.

The Senate amendment contained an identical provision (sec. 812).

The conference agreement includes this provision.

Coordination and communication of defense research activities (sec. 805)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 824) that would amend section 2364 of title 10, United States Code, to require that papers prepared by a defense research facility on a technological issue relating to a major weapon system be available for consideration at all decision reviews.

The Senate amendment contained an identical provision (sec. 807).

The conference agreement includes this provision.

Addition of certain items to domestic source limitation (sec. 806)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 825) that would add certain named vessel components to domestic source limitations, as provided in section 2534(a) of title 10, United States Code. The provision would also extend, through October 1, 2000, current limitations related to anti-friction bearings and would require that these limitations be applicable to contracts and subcontracts below the simplified acquisition threshold, as well as for commercial subcontracts.

The Senate contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would modify the list of vessel components to be added to the domestic source limitations in section 2534 of title 10, United States Code. The provision includes language that would restrict the application of the domestic source limitations to the additional vessel components for contracts entered into after March 31, 1996. The provision would allow the Secretary of the navy additional waiver authority for the application of such limitations based on a determination that such application would result in retaliatory trade action by a foreign country against the United States.

The conferees have included language that would require, for a two-year period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act, a similar limitation on the purchase of propellers with a diameter of six feet or more. The conferees direct the Secretary of the Navy to provide the congressional defense committees by March 1, 1996 with an assessment of the impact on the Navy's ability to maintain and modernize the fleet, and address the impact of the limitation on the purchase of and the castings for such propellers. The conferees also remain concerned over the pressing need to sustain a robust ship propeller repair and maintenance commercial base. Therefore, the conferees strongly urge the Navy to take this critical objective fully into account in allocating propeller repair work in the future.

Encouragement of use of leasing authority for commercial vehicles (sec. 807)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 827) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to use lease agreements for acquisition of equipment, whenever practicable and otherwise authorized by law. The House provision would also direct the Secretary to submit to Congress, within 90 days after enactment of this bill, a report indicating changes in legislation required to facilitate the Department of Defense use of leases for the acquisition of equipment.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 392), similar to the House provision, that would also provide authority for the Secretary of Defense to conduct a pilot program for lease of commercial utility cargo vehicles under certain prescribed conditions.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Cost reimbursement rules for indirect costs attributable to private sector work of defense contractors (sec. 808)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 844) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to enter into agreements with contractors performing or seeking to perform private sector work. The House provision would apply modified accounting rules with respect to the allocation of indirect costs associated with a contractor's private sector work.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would clarify the method for allocation of indirect costs to contractor private sector work and would require the Secretary of Defense to report on the use of the authority contained in this provision. The conferees expect the Secretary to act expeditiously on each defense contractor application for an agreement under this section.

Subcontracts for ocean transportation services (sec. 809)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 802(b)) that would delay, until May 1, 1996, the inclusion of section 1241(b) of title 46, United States Code, or section 2631 of title 10, United States Code, on a list promulgated under section 430(b) of title 41, United States Code.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Prompt resolution of audit recommendations (sec. 820)

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Test programs for negotiation of comprehensive subcontracting plans (sec. 811)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 804) that would amend the test authority to remove the limitation on the activities that may be included in a test. The provision would also reduce the number of contracts and the aggregate dollar value of those contracts required to establish a condition for a contractor's participation in the test program.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Authority to procure for test or experimental purposes (sec. 812)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 808) that would amend section 2373 of title 10, United States Code, to conform the newly-codified section to the scope of the service-specific statutes it replaced.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Use of funds for acquisition of rights to use designs, processes, technical data and computer software (sec. 813)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 810) that would clarify section 2386 of title 10, United States Code, regarding the types of information the Secretary of Defense may acquire from Department of Defense contractors.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Independent cost estimates for major defense acquisition programs (sec. 814)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 811) that would permit the military departments or defense agencies, independent of their respective acquisition executives, to prepare independent cost estimates for major defense acquisitions assigned to individual components for oversight. The provision would align the responsibility for independent cost estimates with the level of the decision authority.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Construction, repair, alteration, furnishing, and equipping of naval vessels (sec. 815)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 813) that would restore the policy regarding the application of the Walsh-Healey Act, repealed by the Federal Acquisition Streamlining Act 1994, to contracts for the construction, alteration, furnishing, or equipping of naval vessels.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Subtitle B—Other Matters

Procurement technical assistance programs (sec. 821)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 821) that would add $12.0 million to continue the procurement technical assistance center program in fiscal year 1996.

The House bill contained no similar provision, but authorized $10.0 million to continue the program in fiscal year 1996.

The House recedes.

Additional Department of Defense pilot programs (sec. 822)

The conferees have adopted a provision that would set forth criteria for designating a facility to participate in a Department of Defense pilot program and require that the Congress approve the designation in legislation enacted after the enactment of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1996. The conferees intended that the pilot program be used to test, among other initiatives, the expansion of commercial practices throughout a facility in which work is being performed under contracts with the Department of Defense. Nothing in this provision is intended to authorize or award a contract, or to exempt a facility from competition requirements in the award of a contract.

Treatment of Department of Defense cable television franchise agreements (sec. 823)

The Senate amendment included a provision (sec. 822) that would require cable television franchise agreements between cable television operators and the Department of Defense to be considered contracts for the telecommunications services under Part 49 of the Federal Acquisition Regulation (FAR).

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment. The amendment would require the United States Court of Federal Claims to render an advisory opinion to Congress on the power of the executive branch to treat cable franchise agreements as contracts under the FAR and, if so, whether the executive branch is required by law to treat these agreements as contracts under the FAR. If the answer to both questions is affirmative, the conferees expect the Department of Defense to implement regulations treating cable franchise agreements as contracts for purposes of the FAR. If the Court renders an affirmative answer to the first question, the conferees will regard that as significant basis for enacting a provision similar to that in the Senate amendment.

Mentor-protege program authority (sec. 824)

The conferees have adopted a provision that would extend for one year the authority for eligible businesses under the Mentor-Protege program to enter into new agreements. The conferees agree that this extension does not prejudge the outcome of ongoing reviews of programs with similar objectives.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Testing of defense acquisition programs

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 823) that would amend section 2366 of title 10, United States Code, regarding requirements for operational testing in defense acquisition programs.

The House bill contained no similar provision

The Senate recedes.

Repeal of duplicative authority for simplified acquisition purchases

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 817) that would repeal the authority for simplified acquisition purchases in section 427 of title 41, United States Code.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Restriction on reimbursement of costs

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 819) that would prohibit reimbursement of allowable costs above $250,000 for individual compensation in fiscal year 1996. The provision also expressed the sense of the Senate that Congress should consider making such prohibition permanent.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees question the appropriateness of the level of industry executive compensation reimbursement as an allowable expense under government contracts. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to conduct a thorough assessment of its current policies and procedures regarding standards of allowability, allocability, and reasonableness of compensation reimbursement by the Department of Defense. In carrying out such assessment, the Secretary should conduct a survey of the executive compensation practices of comparable non-defense firms involved with similar industries, taking into consideration size and geographic location.

The conferees direct the Secretary to submit a report to the congressional defense committees not later than March 31, 1996. The report should detail the results of the Secretary's assessment and any changes to current policies and procedures, implemented as a result of the assessment.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary of Defense to conduct a detailed review of the organization and functions of the Office of the Secretary of Defense, including the Washington Headquarters Service and the Defense Support Agencies. The House bill contained a provision (sec. 903) that would require the Secretary of Defense to prepare and submit a report to Congress that describes the Secretary's plan to incorporate the national security programs of the Department of Energy (DOE) into the Department of Defense. In developing the plan the Secretary would be required to make every effort to preserve the integrity, mission, and functions of these programs. The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 3151) that would require the Secretary of Defense to provide the congressional defense committees with an assessment of the effectiveness of the DOE. The assessment should include: (1) maintaining the nuclear weapons stockpile; (2) management of its environmental, health, and safety requirements, and national security research and development, as compared with similar DoD operations; and (3) the fulfillment of DOE's Nuclear Posture Review requirements.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that combines both provisions.

Redesignation of Advanced Research Projects Agency (sec. 908)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 908) that would change the designation of the Advanced Research Projects Agency to the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency.

Section 1634 stipulates that the provisions of Executive Order 12344, dated February 1, 1982, pertaining to the Naval Nuclear Propulsion Program, shall remain in force until changed by law.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees agree to a new provision that would provide that:

(1) Effective October 1, 1998, section 1634 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1985 is repealed.

(2) An Executive order that includes a provision that, after October 1, 1998, would amend, modify, or repeal Executive Order 12344 (42 U.S.C. 7158 note) may not be issued until 60 days after notification of an intent to modify Executive Order 12344 has been submitted in writing to the congressional defense committees.

Subtitle B—Financial Management

Transfer authority regarding funds available for foreign currency fluctuation (sec. 911)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1006) that would authorize a foreign currency fluctuation account for the military personnel appropriation. This authorization would be limited to fiscal year 1996 and subsequent appropriations.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Defense Modernization Account (sec. 912)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1003) that would establish a Defense Modernization Account to encourage savings within the Department of Defense and to make those savings available to address the serious shortfall in funding for modernization.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Under the conference agreement, the Secretary of Defense could place in the Defense Modernization Account funds saved from achieving economies and efficiencies in: (1) investment programs; and (2) installation management (to the extent that unobligated balances in installation management are available during the last 30 days of the fiscal year). The conferees fully expect the Department to protect current readiness of the forces, particularly in regard to funds for budget activities one and two in the operation and maintenance appropriations accounts.

In order to encourages savings by the military departments and the Department of Defense, funds placed in the account would be reserved for use by the department or component that generated the savings. No funds could be made available from the account by the department of defense except through established reprogramming procedures. Reprogramming procedures could not be used to exceed the statutory funding authorization or statutory quantity ceiling applicable to a given program. The amount of funds that could be reprogrammed by the Department of Defense could not exceed $500.0 million in any one fiscal year.

Disbursing and certifying officials (sec. 913)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1004) that would provide for the designation and appointment of disbursing and certifying officials within the Department of Defense.

Limitation on use of authority to pay for emergency and extraordinary expenses (sec. 915)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 372) that would require the Secretary of Defense to submit to Congress a quarterly report of expenditures for emergency and extraordinary expenses. The provision would also require the Secretary of Defense to provide congressional notification prior to an obligation or expenditure of $1.0 million or more.

The Senate amendment included a provision (sec. 1005) that would require the Secretary of Defense to notify Congress five days prior to an obligation or expenditure of emergency and extraordinary expenses authority in excess of $500,000 and 15 days prior to an obligation or expenditure of $1.0 million. The provision would allow the Secretary of Defense to waive the time period required for notification prior to obligation or expenditure of funds if a determination were made that such prior notification would compromise national security objectives. In the event the Secretary uses the authority to waive notification for national security reasons, notification would be required 30 days after the expenditure of funds or on the date the activity is completed.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary of Defense to notify the congressional defense committees five days in advance of obligation or expenditure of funds in excess of $500,000 or 15 days in advance of obligation or expenditure of funds in excess of $1.0 million. In the event the Secretary determines that prior notification of the obligation or expenditure of funds would compromise national security objectives, the provision would allow the Secretary to waive the waiting period. In the event a national security waiver is necessary, the Secretary shall immediately notify the congressional defense committees of the need to expend funds, and provide the chairman and ranking member, or their designees, with any relevant information, including the amount and purposes for the obligation or expenditure.

The conferees remain concerned about the use of Department of Defense funds for purposes that are more appropriately funded through the international affairs budget. The conferees urge the administration to refrain recommending the use of the Department of Defense emergency and extraordinary expenses authority for non-defense purposes. The conferees also caution the Department to exercise minimal and judicious use of the national security waiver.

TITLE X—GENERAL PROVISIONS

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Assistance to local educational agencies when installation housing is located on leased land

The conferees note that the Secretary of Education has declined to recognize military connected students as residing on Federal property if the government owned housing in which they reside is located on leased land. In one case, recognition of on-installation residency was denied even though the housing is located within the security perimeter of the installation and is managed in the same manner as government housing located on government owned land.

The conferees believe that, for purposes of assistance to local educational agencies, residents of government owned housing, located on land leased by the government and managed in the same manner as government housing on government owned land, shall be considered residents of federal property.

Authority to conduct personnel demonstration projects

The National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1995 made permanent the authority of the Secretary of the Navy to continue personnel demonstration projects at the Naval Air Warfare Center Weapons Division, China Lake, California, and the Naval Command, Control, and Ocean Center, San Diego, California, and at successor organizations resulting from the reorganization of Naval Air Warfare Center Weapons Division or the Naval Command, Control, and Ocean Center. Additionally, the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1995 provided expanded authority for the Secretary of Defense to conduct personnel demonstration projects at Science and Technology Reinvention Laboratories.

The conferees are concerned about what appears to be a lack of real progress in this area over the past year. Therefore, the conferees direct the Department of Defense to report to the Senate Committee on Armed Services and the House Committee on National Security, not later than February 1, 1996, the extent to which these expanded authorities have been used in each of the military departments. As a minimum, this report should include those demonstration projects proposed by the military departments, the status of each such proposal, and the projected date for final action on each proposal.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Subtitle A—Financial Matters

Transfer Authority (sec. 1001)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1001) that would allow the Department of Defense to transfer up to $2.0 billion between accounts using normal reprogramming procedures.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 1001).

The House recedes.

Incorporation of classified annex (sec. 1002)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1002) that would incorporate by reference the classified annex to the bill. In addition, the provision would authorize the expenditure of funds made available for programs, projects, and activities referred to in the classified annex according to the terms, conditions, limitations, restrictions, and requirements of those programs, projects, and activities.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with a technical amendment.

Improved funding mechanisms for unbudgeted operations (sec. 1003), Operation Provide Comfort (sec. 1004), and Operation Enhanced Southern Watch (sec. 1005)

The House Bill contained a provision (sec. 1003) that would establish a procedure for the funding of contingency operations out of accounts other than those which are normally known as operational readiness accounts. This provision would also require the President to budget for any operations that are ongoing in the first quarter of a fiscal year and are expected to continue into the next fiscal year. If the President were to fail to request the necessary funds in his annual budget, then funding for these operations would be denied at the start of the next fiscal year.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would include three separate provisions that would: (1) modify the funding mechanism proposed by the House for contingency operations; (2) authorize $503.8 million for Enhanced Southern Watch and require that semi-permanent elements of this operation be designated as forward presence operations; and (3) authorize $143.3 million for Provide Comfort and require the Secretary of Defense to provide a report on this operation. The authorization includes both military personnel and operations and maintenance funding.

The conferees have observed with concern, the continuing growth of the Department of Defense involvement in unbudgeted peacekeeping and humanitarian contingency operations that negatively impact upon military readiness. The Secretary of Defense initially estimated the unbudgeted fiscal year 1996 costs to the Department for ongoing operations in Iraq, Haiti and Bosnia to be $1.2 billion. This amount excludes the estimated $1.5 billion incremental cost of the proposed deployment of U.S. ground forces to Bosnia. Lacking the budgeted resources, the Department has resorted to the practice of financing the cost of these operations from the military services' operational readiness accounts. This practice has resulted in the cancellation or deferral of some training exercises, necessary equipment maintenance, and other routine activities that degrade the readiness of the force. Depending on what activities are foregone, this adverse impact could be significant.

In recognition of this problem, the Administration's fiscal year 1996 legislative proposal contained a request to grant the Secretary of Defense extraordinary authority to transfer funds between accounts. The conferees instead recommend a provision that would more fully address this mater by providing new funding mechanisms for unforeseen and unbudgeted contingency operations.

To address unforeseen and unbudgeted operations, the provision would revise existing provisions of law to require the Secretary of Defense to draw upon the Defense Business Operating Fund (DBOF) to provide much of the funding for these operations. In addition, the provision authorizes a targeted transfer authority of $200.0 million from non-readiness accounts. These accounts are intended to serve as interim funding mechanisms until Congress approves a supplemental appropriations package to replenish the DBOF cash balances or other accounts from which funds were transferred.

To address ongoing operations in southern Iraq, the conferees recommend a provision that would authorize $503.8 million for Enhanced Southern Watch during fiscal year 1996 and would require that before obligating more than $250 million of this amount, the Secretary of Defense shall provide the Congressional Defense Committees with a report designating any elements of Operation Enhanced Southern Watch that are semi-permanent in nature as forward presence operations that should be budgeted in the future in the same manner as other forward present operations routinely budgeted as part of the annual defense budget. The conferees believe that the aftermath of the Persian Gulf War has fundamentally altered the security situation in the region in a manner that will require a significant U.S. presence for years to come.

To address the operation designated as Provide Comfort, the conferees recommend a provision that would authorize $143.3 million in fiscal year 1996. This provision would also require the Secretary of Defense to submit a report that details the expected fiscal year 1996 costs of that operation, and the missions and functions expected to be performed by the Department of Defense and other agencies of the Federal Government. In addition, this report should discuss the options related to reduction of the level of the military involvement in the operation, and include an exit strategy for the United States.

Finally, the conferees express the view that costs borne by the Department of Defense in conducting contingency operations in support of another agency's mission, such as humanitarian relief, law enforcement and immigration control, should not be assessed against the defense budget topline. The conferees are concerned with the increasing cost of these operations at a time of declining defense budgets and the negative impact this has had upon military readiness. The conferees endorse the historical principle of maintaining a peacetime defense budget designed to adequately fund the activities of the Department of Defense to organize, train and equip military forces in a manner sufficient to meet national security requirements.

In addition, the conferees note that the five year defense program remains underfunded relative to the national security strategy and recommended military force structure. The negative impact of these shortfalls will grow in the years ahead and threaten our ability to maintain adequate levels of short and long-term readiness, including sorely needed equipment modernization. Therefore, the conferees believe that funding for contingency operations should be provided in addition to what would have otherwise been made available for the Department of Defense for its normal peacetime activities.

Unauthorized appropriations for fiscal year 1995 (sec. 1006)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1005) that would allow the Department of Defense to obligate funds for all fiscal year 1995 programs, projects, and activities for which the amount appropriated exceeded the amount authorized.

The Senate amendment contained no such provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that provides exceptions as specifically cited in this section.

Authorization of prior year emergency supplemental appropriations for fiscal year 1995 (sec. 1007)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1006) that would authorize the emergency supplemental appropriations enacted in the Emergency Supplemental Appropriations and Rescissions for the Department of Defense to Preserve and Enhance Military Readiness Act of 1995 (Public Law 104-6). This Act provided funding for fiscal year 1995 expenses related to military operations in Southwest Asia, Haiti, Cuba, Somalia, Bosnia, and Korea.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 1004).

The Senate recedes.

Authorization reductions to reflect savings from revised economic assumptions (sec. 1008).

The conferees agree to a provision that would reflect revised economic assumptions that were not available prior to the conference report.

Subtitle B—Naval Vessels and Shipyards

Iowa class battleships (sec. 1011)

In February 1995 the Secretary of the Navy made a decision to strike the Navy's four inactive Iowa class battleships from the naval register. The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1011) that would direct the Secretary of the Navy to restore at least two Iowa class battleships to the naval register in an inactive status. The Secretary would be required to retain them on the register until he is prepared to certify that the Navy has within the fleet an operational surface fire support capability that equals or exceeds the fire support capability that the battleships could provide if returned to active service.

The Senate provision would recognize the fact that battleships could provide a surface fire support capability unmatched by any other Navy weapons system and that there is an ongoing concern regarding the Department of the Navy's apparent lack of commitment to provide for the surface fire support capability necessary for amphibious assaults. The ability of the Marine Corps and the Navy to conduct forcible entry by amphibious assault is an essential element of the Department of the Navy's strategic concept for littoral warfare.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment.

The conferees believe that the Department of the Navy's future years defense program, presented with the fiscal year 1996 budget, could not produce a replacement fire support capability comparable to the battleships until well into the next century. The conferees consider retention of two battleships in the fleet's strategic reserve a prudent measure.

Transfer of naval vessels to certain foreign countries (sec. 1012)

The Senate amendment included a provision (sec. 1012) that would authorize the Secretary of the Navy to transfer eight FFG-7 class guided missile frigates to various countries. Seven of the frigates would be transferred by grant, and one by lease.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would:

(1) reduce the number of grant transfers from seven to four, and the remaining frigates would be transferred by lease or sale;

(2) require that, as a condition of the transfer of the eight frigates, any repair or refurbishment needed before the transfer, be performed at a shipyard located in the United States;

(3) amend section 2763 of title 22, United States Code, to permit foreign countries to use foreign assistance funds to lease vessels;

(4) amend section 2321j of title 22, United States Code, to prohibit future grant transfers of any vessel that is in excess of 3,000 tons or that is less than 20 years old.

The conferees are aware that in some cases U.S. national security will be best served by a grant transfer, particularly when the recipient is an important coalition defense partner that is making valuable contributions to U.S. security or lacks the resources to obtain a vessel by lease or sale. Accordingly, the amendment to section 2321j would permit the President to request a future grant transfer if it is determined that it is in the national security interest of the United States.

Contract options for LMSR vessels (sec. 1013)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1021) that would recommend that the Secretary of the Navy negotiate a contract option price for a seventh large medium speed roll-on/roll-off (LMSR) strategic sealift ship at each of the two shipyards that currently have construction contracts.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

National Defense Reserve Fleet (sec. 1014)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 381) that would permit the use of the National Defense Sealift Fund (NDSF) to budget for expenses of the national defense reserve fleet (NDRF). Beginning with the fiscal year 1996 request, funds for NDRF expenses would be included in the NDSF budget request within budget function 051.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would:

(1) clarify that NDRF vessels would not require retrofit to a double hull configuration as a consequence of this change in budgeting procedure;

(2) clarify that NDSF funds shall not be used for the acquisition of ships for the NDRF that are built in foreign shipyards; and

(3) permit the use of NDSF funds to complete the modifications needed to prepare two roll-on/roll-off ships that were purchased in fiscal year 1995 for incorporation into the ready reserve force of the NDRF.

The conferees intend that the Department of Defense seek and obtain specific legislative authorization prior to obligating and expending any funds for the acquisition of any vessels for the NDRF.

Naval salvage facilities (sec. 1015)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 805) that would consolidate all sections in chapter 637 of title 10, United States Code, relating to naval salvage facilities.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment.

Vessels subject to repair under phased maintenance contracts (sec. 1016)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1022) that would require the Secretary of the Navy to ensure that vessels or classes of vessels, covered by phased maintenance contracts while in active Navy service, would continue to be covered by those contracts after being transferred to other operating commands, such as the Military Sealift Command.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would restrict this requirement to type AE ships covered by phased maintenance contracts as of the date of enactment of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1996.

Clarification of requirements relating to repairs of vessels (sec. 1017)

Section 7310 of title 10, United States Code, places limits on the type of repairs that can be performed by foreign shipyards on Navy ships that are homeported in the United States. The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1023) that would amend section 7310 by designating Guam a United States homeport for purposes of that section.

The Senate recedes.

Naming amphibious ships (sec. 1018)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1013) that would make the following findings:

(1) this is the fiftieth anniversary of the battle of Iwo Jima, one of the greatest victories in the Marine Corps' illustrious history;

(2) the Navy has recently retired the ship that honored that battle, U.S.S. Iwo Jima (LPH-2), the first ship in a class of amphibious assault ships;

(3) this Act authorizes the LHD-7, the final ship of the Wasp class of amphibious assault ships, to replace the Iwo Jima class of ships;

(4) the Navy is planning to start building a new class of amphibious transport docks, now called the LPD-17 class, and this Act also authorizes funds that will lead to procurement of these vessels;

(5) there has been some confusion in the rationale behind naming new naval vessels, with traditional naming conventions frequently violated; and

(6) although there have been good and sufficient reasons to depart from naming conventions in the past, the rationale for such departures has not always been clear.

The Senate amendment would also express the sense of the Senate that:

(1) the LHD-7, authorized in the Senate amendment, should be named the U.S.S. Iwo Jima; and

(2) the ships of the LPD-17 class amphibious ships should be named after a Marine Corps battle or a member of the Marine Corps.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment. The conferees agree to endorse the sense of the Senate expressed as a sense of Congress.

Naming of naval vessel (sec. 1019)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1024) that would express the sense of Congress that the Secretary of the Navy should name an appropriate naval vessel the U.S.S. Joseph Vittori.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Transfer of riverine patrol craft (sec. 1020)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1025) that would authorize the Secretary of the Navy to transfer one Swift class riverine patrol craft to the Tidewater Community College, Portsmouth, Virginia, for scientific and educational purposes.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Subtitle C—Counter Drug Activities

Counter-drug activities

The budget request for drug interdiction and counterdrug activities totals $680.4 million, plus $131.5 million for operational tempo which is included within the operating budgets of the military services.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment would authorize the budget request of $680.4 million, with marginal differences in the allocation of these funds.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment would delete funding for the Community Outreach Programs ($8.2 million). In addition, the Senate amendment included a provision (sec. 1022) that would prohibit continued Department of Defense (DOD) funding of the National Drug Intelligence Center (NDIC) ($34.0 million).

The House bill would authorize increased funding for the Tethered Aerostat Radar System ($1.5 million), Counterdrug Analysis ($1.2 million), Southcom Radars ($1.5 million), Special Operations Forces (SOF) Counterdrug Support ($2.5 million), and CARIBROC Communications ($1.5 million).

The Senate amendment would authorize an increase in funding for procurement of non-intrusive inspection devices for the Customs Service ($25.0 million), Source Nation Support Initiatives ($15.2 million) and the Gulf States Counterdrug Initiative ($2.0 million).

The conferees agree to delete DOD funding for the Community Outreach Programs and the National Drug Intelligence Center.

The conferees agree to authorize additional funding for Law Enforcement Agency Support, with a $4.0 million increase to expand the intelligence activities of the Gulf States Coast Initiative and a $2.5 million increase for the Southwest Border States Information System. The conferees support continued DOD assistance for the Southwest Border States Anti-Drug Information System and urge the Secretary of Defense to continue to monitor and support this system through completion of the current program.

The conferees further agree to authorize an additional increase of $28.0 million for other Law Enforcement Agency Support. The conferees urge the Secretary of Defense, through normal reprogramming procedures, to use up to $25.0 million of these funds to procure low-energy/backscatter x-ray equipment for use as non-intrusive inspection devices. The conferees are aware that 70 percent of the illegal drugs that enter the United States come, primarily by air, into Mexico and then across the southwest border by truck and automobile. The conferees believe that the fielding of non-intrusive detection devices at the southwest border would significantly contribute to the fight against illegal drug trafficking across the United States-Mexican border. The conferees also urge the Secretary of Defense, through normal reprogramming procedures, to consider using available funds for improvements and extension of the existing fence along the San Diego Border Patrol Sector.

The conferees agree to authorize an additional $7.7 million for other Source Nation Initiatives. These funds could be used for refurbishment and relocation of U.S. ground-based radars, high frequency secure communications among allied (Andean Ridge) nations, night vision goggles and global positioning systems, flight plan computers, podded radars, direction-finding capability, secure tactical field and aircraft radios, and other critical requirements associated with source nations.

Allocation of funds for counterdrug activities are indicated below:

The provision would also amend section 2525 of title 10, United States Code, by adding a series of guidelines to the requirement for the preparation of the manufacturing science and technology master plan. Finally, the conferees have included language that would modify the defense dual-use critical technology program authorized by section 2511 of title 10, United States Code. In using the authority under this section, the conferees expect the Secretary of Defense to give equal consideration to the development of both product and process technologies.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary to examine central scheduling and management of such aircraft in the report.

The conferees believe that the review of OSA operations should focus on savings and scheduling rationalization. The conferees believe that the Department of Defense can achieve efficiencies by revamping the current OSA program, and have included a reduction in OSA flying hours for fiscal year 1996 in this provision.

While prior studies of OSA organization have recommended realigning OSA management, the conferees refrain from directing the Department to make specific organizational changes at this time.

Check cashing and exchange transactions for dependents of United States Government personnel (sec. 1090)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1088) that would authorize United States disbursing personnel to extend check-cashing and currency exchange services to the dependents of military and civilian personnel at government installations that do not have adequate banking facilities.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

National Maritime Center (sec. 1091)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1099D) that would designate the Nauticus building, located at one Waterside Drive, Norfolk, Virginia, as the National Maritime Center.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Sense of Congress regarding historic preservation of Midway Islands (sec. 1092)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1099b) that would express the sense of the Senate that Midway Island be memorialized and the historic structures relating to the Battle of Midway be maintained in accordance with the National Historic Preservation Act.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would make the provision a Sense of the Congress.

Sense of the Senate regarding federal spending (sec. 1093)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1095) that would express a sense of the Senate regarding federal spending.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Extension of authority for vessel war risk insurance (sec. 1094)

The conferees agree to a new provision that would amend section 1214 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (46 App. U.S.C. 1294) to extend the Secretary of Transportation's authority to provide insurance against loss or damage as a result of marine war risks from June 30, 1995 to June 30, 2000. The conferees acknowledge the cooperation of the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate, the committee of jurisdiction in the Senate, for permitting inclusion of this important authority in the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1996.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Application of Buy America Act principles

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1035) that would apply Buy American principles to reciprocal defense procurement memoranda of understanding with other countries.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees note that section 849 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1994 (Public Law 103–160) contains identical language that is the operative law in this area.

Repeal of requirements for part-time career opportunity employment reports

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 339) that would eliminate the requirement in section 3407 of title 5, United States Code, that agencies provide progress reports on the part-time career employment program.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Holidays for employees whose basic work week is other than Monday through Friday

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 342) that would amend section 6103(b)(2) of title 5, United States Code, to authorize agencies some discretion in designating holidays for employees whose basic work week is other than Monday through Friday.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Assistance to Customs Service

The Senate amendment included a provision (sec. 1023) that would authorize the Department of Defense to procure or transfer funds to the Customs Service for procurement of non-intrusive inspection devices for use at the ports of entry on the southwest border of the United States.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes. The conferees agree, as stated elsewhere in this statement of managers, to urge the Secretary of Defense to procure non-intrusive inspection devices with funds available through reprogramming procedures.

Establishment of Junior ROTC units in Indian reservation schools

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1036) that would express the Sense of the Congress that secondary schools on Indian reservations be afforded full opportunity to be selected as locations for establishing new Junior Reserve Officers' Training Corps units.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees agree that current law affords full opportunity for secondary schools on Indian reservations to be selected as locations for establishing new Junior Reserve Officers' Training Corps units.

Defense Cooperation Between the United States and Israel

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1055) that would express the Sense of Congress for continued cooperation between the United States and Israel in military and technical areas.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes. The conferees note that a provision virtually identical to that contained in the Senate amendment exists in the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1995 (Public Law 103–337). The conferees recognize the numerous benefits to the United States resulting from our strategic relationship with Israel. The conferees strongly commend the United States' continuing commitment to maintaining Israel's qualitative edge over any combination of adversaries. Despite the great progress made in the Middle East peace process, Israel continues to face an unstable and highly dangerous environment, compounded by the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and ballistic missiles.

International military education and training

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1058) that would, subject to the provisions of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, grant discretionary authority to the Secretary of Defense to provide up to $20.0 million for the provision of international military education and training (IMET) for countries allied and friendly with the United States.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees strongly support Department of Defense funding for and management of the IMET program. IMET is a unique military program that fosters military-to-military relationships and contributes to greater inter-operability and coalition-building with the military organizations of allied and friendly nations. IMET has suffered in recent years from being part of the State Department's budget which has become increasingly unpopular with the American public and their elected representatives. The conferees are pleased to note, however, that the Foreign Operations Appropriations Conference Report for Fiscal Year 1996 fully funds the administration's IMET request.

The conferees intend to address this matter next year with a view towards transferring budgetary and execution responsibility for IMET to the Department of Defense. Accordingly, the conferees encourage the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of State to work out a process for such a transfer to ensure smooth and effective functioning with robust future funding.

Sense of the Senate on protection of United States from ballistic missile attack

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1062) that would express the Sense of the Senate that all Americans should be protected from accidental, intentional, or limited ballistic missile attack, and that front line troops of the United States should be protected from missile attacks. The Senate provision would also provide funding for the Corps surface-to-air missile (SAM) program.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes. Although the conferees fully support the views expressed in the Senate provision, they believe that such views are adequately represented elsewhere in the conference report. The conferees also address the Corps SAM issue elsewhere in the conference report.

Travel of disabled veterans on military aircraft

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1089) that would permit veterans eligible for compensation for a service-connected disability the same entitlement to space-available transportation as retired members of the Armed Forces.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees note the unreliable nature of space-available flight, and that such flights would normally involve cargo-type aircraft, which are not equipped for handicapped access, seating and care. The conferees agree that concerns for the safety of disabled veterans were overriding in this decision.

Transportation of crippled children in the Pacific Rim region to Hawaii for medical care

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1090) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to permit space-available transportation of crippled children in the Pacific Rim region to Hawaii for medical care in non-military medical facilities.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to conduct a study, consulting with the Shriners Hospitals in the Pacific region, to determine the viability and potential liabilities of such a program. The report should be provided to the Senate Committee on Armed Services and the House Committee on National Security not later than May 1, 1996.

Sense of Senate regarding Ethics Committee investigations

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1094) expressing the Sense of the Senate concerning proceedings before the Senate Ethics Committee with respect to Senator Packwood.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

TITLE XI—UNIFORM CODE OF MILITARY JUSTICE

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

References to Uniform Code of Military Justice (sec. 1102)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 541) that would clarify references to the Uniform Code of Military Justice in the bill.

The Senate amendment contained an identical provision (sec. 521).

The conference agreement includes this provision.

Subtitle A—Offenses

Refusal to testify before courts-martial (sec. 1111)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 524) that would provide Federal District Courts the same power to punish individuals who fail to appear at courts-martial as they currently have to punish individuals who do not appear in civilian cases.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Flight from apprehension (sec. 1112)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 544) that would make it clear that the offense of "resisting apprehension" under Article 95 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice includes flight from apprehension.

The Senate amendment contained an identical provision (sec. 531).

The conference agreement includes this provision.

Carnal knowledge (sec. 1113)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 532) that would amend Article 120(b) of the Uniform Code of Military Justice (10 U.S.C. 920 (b)) by making the crime of carnal knowledge gender neutral, bringing Article 120 into conformance with the Sexual Abuse Act of 1986. The provision also would add an affirmative defense of mistake of fact to conform Article 120 to federal civilian law (18 U.S.C. 2243).

The House bill contained a similar provision (sec. 545).

The House recedes.

Subtitle B—Sentences

Effective date for forfeitures of pay and allowances and reductions in grade by sentence of court-martial (secs. 1121 and 1122)

The Senate amendment contained provisions (secs. 526(a) and 526(b)) that would require those portions of a court-martial sentence extending to forfeiture of pay and allowances or reduction in grade to be effective 14 days after the date the sentence is adjudged or upon approval by the convening authority, whichever occurs earlier. The amendment would also require that sentences containing a punitive discharge, death, or more than 6 months confinement, result in total forfeitures of pay and allowances. If an accused were to make application to the convening authority, the forfeitures of pay and allowances, or reduction in grade or both could be deferred until the date on which the sentence is approved. Also under this provision, when convening authorities take action on sentences, any or all of the forfeitures of pay and allowances to be forfeited could be used to provide transitional compensation for the dependents of the accused.

The House bill contained a similar provision (sec. 542).

The House recedes with an amendment which would apply the automatic forfeitures to a sentence of death, punitive discharge, or confinement in excess of six months. The forfeiture in the case of a special court-martial would be limited to two-thirds of the pay due, which is the maximum punishment limitation of a special court-martial.

Deferment of confinement (sec. 1123)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 527) that would allow for the deferment of confinement adjudged by courts-martial in two situations beyond those authorized under current law. One would permit deferment of confinement while the case is being reviewed by the United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces under Article 67(a)(2). The other circumstance that would lead to deferment concerns individuals who are serving civilian confinement while they have a sentence pending that has been adjudged by a court-martial. The Senate amendment would defer the running of the court-martial sentence until completion of the civilian sentence, if the convening authority so directs.

The House bill contained no similar amendment.

The House recedes.

Subtitle C—Pretrial and Post-Trial Actions

Article 32 investigations (sec. 1131)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 523) that would revise the procedures for authorizing investigation of misconduct uncovered during a pretrial investigation under Article 32 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. Under Article 32 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice, a formal pretrial investigation is conducted when a court-martial convening authority refers charges to an Article 32 investigating officer. Under current law, if the Article 32 officer uncovers evidence of additional misconduct in the course of the investigation, the information must be provided to the convening authority and then referred back to the Article 32 officer before it can be investigated by the Article 32 investigating officer.

The conferees agree that current law should be changed to permit the investigating officer to investigate new misconduct uncovered during the Article 32 investigation without requiring further administrative action by the convening authority. This change should reduce the time, delay, and administrative burden associated with obtaining the convening authority's approval for investigation of additional misconduct. The conferees emphasize, however, that the additional misconduct may not be investigated under Article 32 unless the accused is afforded the same rights as under current law with respect to investigation of the charges, presentation of evidence in defense or mitigation, and cross-examination as apply to the charges that were the basis of the Article 32 investigation.

Submission of matters to the convening authority for consideration (sec. 1132)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 528) that would require all post-trial material submitted to the convening authority by the accused to be in writing. Current law does not specify the medium for such submissions.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees agree that the intent of this section is not to restrict the accused's communications with the convening authority, but to ensure that formal submissions under Article 60(b) are made through a standard medium. The convening authority, in his or her discretion, may take into consideration other communications by the accused, such as a personal appearance or a videotape. The convening authority, however, is not required to review such other matters under Article 60, and a convening authority's decision to refuse consideration of matters other than written submissions is not subject to review. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to ensure that the explanatory "Discussion" accompanying the Manual for Courts-Martial reflect that this amendment does not restrict the ability of the convening authority to consider communications from the accused that are not written submissions.

Commitment of accused to treatment facility by reason of lack of mental capacity or mental reponsibility (sec. 1133)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 525) that would establish procedures for handling individuals who are mentally incompetent to stand trial or found not guilty by reason of lack of mental responsibility.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

This provision is in no way intended to conflict with Rule 706 of the Rules for Courts-Martial. To the extent that there is a provisions overlap, section 706 should be reviewed to make certain that it conforms with the new provision.

Subtitle D—Appellate Matters

Appeals by the United States (sec. 1141)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 530) that would apply to courts-martial the same protections with regard to classified information as apply to orders or rulings issued in Federal District Courts under the Classified Information Procedures Act (18 U.S.C. App. 7). This section incorporates Senate amendment section 522 concerning certain definitions.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment.

Repeal of termination of authority for Chief Justice of United States to designate Article III judges for temporary service on Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces (sec. 1142)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 549) that would make permanent the authority of the Chief Justice of the United States to fill temporary vacancies on the United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces. Section 1301 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 1990 and 1991 authorized the Chief Judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces to request the Chief Justice to make such appointments through September 30, 1995. This provision would eliminate the "sunset" provision.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 535).

The Senate recedes.

Subtitle E—Other matters

Advisory committee on criminal law jurisdiction over civilians accompanying the Armed Forces in time of armed conflict (sec. 1151)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 536) that would create an advisory panel to determine which courts should have criminal jurisdiction over civilians accompanying the military outside the United States during times of armed conflict, including conflicts other than a declared war.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Time after accession for initial instruction in the Uniform Code of Military Justice (sec. 1152)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 546) that would increase the time after accession for initial instruction in the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

The Senate amendment (sec. 533) contained an identical provision.

The conference agreement includes this provision.

Technical amendment (sec. 1153)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 550) that would amend article 66(f) of the Uniform Code of Military Justice (10 U.S.C. 866) by striking out "Courts of Military Review" in both places it appears, and inserting in lieu thereof "Courts of Criminal Appeals".

The Senate amendment contained an identical provision (sec. 534).

The conference agreement includes this provision.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Persons who may appear before the United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 547) that would provide that only attorneys and properly certified law students could practice and appear before the United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees believe that the question of who should be authorized to appear before the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces normally should be addressed through the rules promulgated by the court, rather than through legislation. The conferees are concerned, however, that the Court has permitted undergraduate students to appear before the Court as amicus curiae. However laudable it may be to afford such students practical experience appearing before a federal court, the conferees believe such considerations are outweighed by the requirement that the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces maintain the highest standards of judicial practice and procedure. The conferees are aware that the Court presently has this matter under review and look forward to a change in the Court's rules of procedure that will obviate the need for legislation on this subject.

Discretionary representation by government appellate defense counsel in petitioning the Supreme Court for writ of certiorari

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 548) that would amend section 870 of title 10, United States Code, to provide that representations of an accused, in the preparation of a petition for a writ of certiorari before the United States Supreme Court, shall be at the discretion of military appellate defense counsel. Current law requires appellate defense counsel to represent the accused before the Supreme Court when requested by the accused.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Proceedings in revision

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 529) that would authorize a proceeding in revision at courts-martial prior to authentication of the record under certain conditions.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

TITLE XII—COOPERATIVE THREAT REDUCTION WITH STATES OF FORMER SOVIET UNION

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Cooperative threat reduction program (secs. 1201–1209)

The budget request included $371.0 million in defense operation and maintenance for the Cooperative Threat Reduction (CTR) Program.

The House bill contained provisions (secs. 1101–1108) related to the CTR program that would include the following: authorize $200.0 million for the CTR program, a $171.0 million reduction to the budget request (sec. 1101); place specific limitations on all CTR programs for fiscal year 1996 (sec. 1102); repeal authority for the Demilitarization Enterprise Fund (DEF) (sec. 1103); prohibit the use of CTR funds for peacekeeping exercises and related activities with Russia (sec. 1104); revise authority for assistance for weapons destruction (sec. 1105); require prior notice of obligation of funds (sec. 1106); require an annual accountability report to ensure that assistance is being used for its intended purpose (sec. 1107); and prohibit the obligation or expenditure of fiscal year 1996 funds until the President provides written certification to Congress that Russia has terminated its offensive biological weapons program.

The Senate amendment included several provisions (sec. 1041–1044) related to the CTR program that would include the following: authorize $365.0 million for the CTR program, a $6.0 million reduction to the budget request (sec. 1041); limit the obligation of CTR funds that would assist nuclear weapons scientists in the former Soviet Union, pending a written certification from the Secretary of Defense that funds would not contribute to the modernization of strategic nuclear forces or for research, development or production of weapons of mass destruction (sec. 1042); limit the obligation of $50.0 million, pending a written certification from the President that Russia is in compliance with its obligations under the Biological Weapons Convention (BWC); and limit the use of more than $52.0 million of fiscal year 1996 funds available for CTR, pending a presidential certification that a joint laboratory study to evaluate the Russian neutralization proposal has been completed and the United States agrees with that proposal, that Russia is in the process of preparing a comprehensive destruction and dismantlement plan for its chemical weapons stockpile, and that Russia is committed to resolving outstanding issues under the 1989 Wyoming Memorandum of Understanding and the 1990 Bilateral Destruction Agreement.

The conferees agree to the CTR provisions, as follows: authorize $300.0 million in fiscal year 1996 for CTR and place limitations on the CTR projects in fiscal year 1996; provide authority for individual limitations to be exceeded by a specified percentage; authorize use of CTR funds to reimburse pay accounts for U.S. military reserve members participating in CTR activities; prohibit the use of CTR funds for peacekeeping activities and related activities with Russia; require a presidential determination that each recipient country is observing the criteria for assistance provided under the CTR program; require the Secretary of Defense to provide congressional defense committees with advance notification of obligation of funds; require an annual audit and examination report; limit assistance to nuclear weapons scientists; and limit the obligation of $60.0 million in fiscal year 1996 CTR funds for Russia, pending presidential certification that Russia is complying with its BWC obligations and that Russia has agreed to, and implemented, agreements and visits per the September 14, 1992 Joint Statement on Biological Weapons and that visits to the four declared military biological facilities of Russia by officials of the U.S. and United Kingdom have occurred. If the President is unable to certify Russian compliance with its BWC obligations, or that visits agreed to under the Joint Statement have not occurred, he may certify that fact and related funds would then be available for strategic offensive weapons elimination in Ukraine, Kazakhstan or Belarus. The provision would also prohibit obligation of more than half the funds authorized for chemical weapons destruction-related activities in Russia, pending a presidential certification.

The conferees direct that none of the funds authorized for CTR in fiscal year 1996 may be used to reimburse other departments and agencies for the travel and other expenses incurred by employees of those departments and agencies, even if those employees are engaged in CTR-related activities.

The Conventional Forces in Europe (CFE) Treaty requires signatories to be in full compliance with their obligations to reduce treaty limited equipment by November 16, 1995. The Russian government has generally been in overall compliance with its obligations since the treaty has been in force provisionally. Russia's compliance with the limits in the northern and southern flank zones has caused concern for a number of the signatories. Russian officials have indicated that they will not be in compliance with the flank limits in these zones because of the instability along their southern borders.

If Russia refuses to honor its legal and political obligations under the CFE Treaty, the conferees question the ability of the President to certify Russia's commitment to complying with its arms control obligations, necessary to make it eligible to receive CTR assistance. Further, the conferees believe that the President would only be in a position to certify Russia's commitment to comply with its arms control obligations under the following circumstances: (1) through an agreement to comply with a NATO-endorsed flank limit proposal and substantial progress toward withdrawing any excess equipment by the May 1996 Treaty Review Conference; (2) demonstrated fulfillment of obligations to meet agreed-upon reductions in levels of military equipment in the naval infantry and coastal defense forces, and in holdings east of the Ural mountains; and (3) through an agreement on an offset package that would add to the flank limit proposal additional verification measures, additional information sharing arrangements on the flank areas, and additional constraints on Treaty-limited equipment contained in areas formerly defined as flank areas.

TITLE XIII—MATTERS RELATING TO OTHER NATIONS

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Waiver of foreign assistance reimbursement requirements to the Department of Defense and the armed forces

The conferees are concerned about the inadequate funding in the fiscal year 1996 international affairs budget for activities identified by the administration as presidential priorities, such as drawdown authority for defense articles and services for Jordan and the transfer of non-lethal defense articles to Central European countries.

While the conferees are generally supportive of both activities, the conferees do not support efforts to waive requirements under Sections 519(f) and 632(d) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961. Those provisions of the Foreign Assistance Act require reimbursement of the Department of Defense and military services for costs to transport defense articles, or replace defense items that are not excess to the military services.

The conferees appreciate the role that Jordan played in the Middle East peace process and believe that the Government of Jordan should have the defense items, services, and military training, that would enable them to protect their borders and respond to terrorist threats. However, the conferees are concerned by the use of defense funds to pay for this authority.

In a letter supporting the special drawdown authority for Jordan, the Secretary of Defense stated that military readiness would suffer unless the non-excess defense items are replaced and the military services are reimbursed for transportation and other costs. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to provide a report to the congressional defense committees 60 days after enactment of this Act that would address the cost to replace non-excess defense items provided to Jordan and an identification of funds included in the President's fiscal year 1997 budget for this purpose.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Subtitle A—Peacekeeping Provisions

Placement of United States forces under United Nations operational or tactical control (sec. 1301)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1201) that would limit the use of Department of Defense funds and the circumstances under which the President could commit U.S. armed forces to United Nations (UN) command and control, and provide exceptions under which armed forces could be placed under UN command and control. The President would be required to certify to the Congress, prior to the placement of U.S. armed forces under UN command and control, the following: that U.S. national security interests require the placement of Armed Forces under UN command and control; that U.S. armed forces commander would retain the right to report independently to U.S. military authorities and decline orders that are illegal, militarily imprudent, or beyond the scope of the mission; that U.S. forces would remain under U.S. administrative command; and that U.S. forces involved would retain the authority to withdraw and take necessary protective actions, if engaged by hostile forces.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1061) that would express the sense of Congress that: U.S. armed forces should not be placed under the operational control of the UN without close and prior consultation with Congress; U.S. armed forces should only be placed under UN command and control when clearly in the national interest; U.S. armed forces should only be placed under qualified commanders with clear and effective command and control; and that U.S. armed forces should only be placed under operational control of foreign commanders in peace enforcement missions, except in the most extraordinary circumstances.

The conferees agree to consolidate the significant elements of both the House bill and the Senate amendment. In comparison to the provision contained in the House bill, the new provision would narrow the required Presidential certification standard to one that would establish: the existence of U.S. national security interests and narrow the definition for UN command and control to exclude conditions where the senior U.S. commander does not have adequate independent authority over subordinate U.S. forces; drop the required report on the constitutionality of placing U.S. forces under UN command and control and the certification requirement that U.S. commanders retain the right to decline to obey orders deemed to be "militarily imprudent".

The conferees remain gravely concerned over the administration's stated willingness, as articulated by Presidential Decision Directive 25, to place U.S. forces under UN operational control during peacekeeping operations. The conferees are pleased to note that the administration's planning assumption for a proposed peacekeeping deployment to Bosnia does not contemplate any such arrangement. The conferees strongly urge the Secretary of Defense to ensure that clearly defined and effective command and control relationships are established for any planned U.S. forces participation in such deployments.

Limitation on use of Department of Defense funds for international peacekeeping assessments and drawdown of Department of Defense articles (sec. 1302)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1202) that would amend chapter 20 of title 10, United States Code, to prohibit the use of Department of Defense funds for voluntary or assessed financial contributions to the United Nations for the United States share of peacekeeping costs, effective October 1, 1995.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Subtitle B—Humanitarian Assistance Programs

Overseas humanitarian, disaster, and civic aid (secs. 1311–1312)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1211) that would specify five programs operated by the Department of Defense to be funded through the budget account known as Overseas Humanitarian, Disaster, and Civic Aid (OHDACA).

The House bill also contained a provision (sec. 1212) that would eliminate the current authority to transfer funds from DOD to the Department of State to provide for the administrative costs associated with the transportation of humanitarian supplies. In addition, this provision would remove the Secretary of State's authority over the DOD's program for the transportation of humanitarian relief, and it would provide for technical changes to the existing reporting requirements for the DOD's humanitarian programs.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 365) that would require the General Accounting Office (GAO) to submit a report to Congress on existing funding mechanisms that would facilitate the funding of programs within the OHDACA account through the Department of State or the Agency for International Development. If such mechanisms do not currently exist, the GAO would be required to identify those actions necessary to institute such mechanisms.

The conference agreement includes these provisions.

The conferees agree that although the DOD is uniquely capable of performing some humanitarian or disaster relief operations, these operations are fundamentally the responsibility of the Department of State and the Agency for International Development and, in general, are more appropriately funded through these agencies. Therefore, the conferees have reduced the amount of DOD funds available to the OHDACA account for fiscal year 1996 and have requested that the GAO provide a report that would identify necessary changes in existing law or regulations to transfer the funding responsibility for these programs, where appropriate, to other federal agencies, beginning in fiscal year 1997.

Landmine clearance program (sec. 1313)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1213) that would amend humanitarian and civic assistance authorities in section 401 of title 10 United States Code to include humanitarian demining activities.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1054) that would amend section 1413 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1995 (Public Law 103–337) to include the following: require the Secretary of Defense to certify to the Congress that humanitarian activities satisfy military training requirements for the personnel involved; authorize $20.0 million in fiscal year 1996 for the humanitarian landmine clearing assistance program; terminate authority for the Department of Defense to provide funds for the humanitarian landmine clearing assistance program after fiscal year 1996; and revise the definition of a landmine.

The conferees agree to a provision that would amend section 401 of title 10 United States Code to include humanitarian demining activities; limit activities of United States military personnel participating in humanitarian landmine clearing activities; and, repeal section 1413 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1995 (Public Law 103–337).

Unlike other types of humanitarian and civic assistance activities, the conferees realize that the activities of detection and clearing of landmines will often be the sole or primary focus of the military operation in question. In such cases, the approving authority would have to determine that the specific operational readiness skills of the participating United States forces—usually special operations forces whose skills are based upon the activities listed in section 167(j) of title 10, United States Code—will be promoted by participation in those activities.

Subtitle C—Arms Export and Military Assistance

Defense export loan guarantees (sec. 1321)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1224) that would require the Secretary of Defense to create a defense export loan guarantee program for certain eligible countries.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 1053) with different criteria for eligible countries.

The House recedes with an amendment that would authorize use of fees generated under the program for payment of start-up costs for administration of the program and for payment of ongoing administrative expenses. The conferees intend to monitor the administration of this program closely to ensure that the method of funding the administrative fees does not impact the process of approval of the loan guarantees.

National security implications of United States export control policy (secs. 1322–1323)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1052) that would express the sense of Congress regarding the national security implications of maintaining effective export controls on dual-use items and technologies that are critical to the military capabilities of the United States. This provision would require the Department to review export licenses for class 2, 3, and 4 biological pathogens with a potential use in biological warfare programs and to determine if export would be contrary to U.S. national security interests.

The House bill did not contain a similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees concur with concerns identified in the Senate report (S. Rept 104–112) that the lowering of export controls on dual-use items and technologies may place current U.S. technologies and defense capabilities at risk. The conferees continue to be concerned with administration support for admittance of nations into the Missile Technology Control Regime (MTCR) and the New Forum absent a record of compliance with the spirit of these regimes prior to their inclusion.

Two years ago in the House report (H. Rept. 103–357), the conferees expressed concern that ". . . loosening the restrictions on space launch vehicle technology within the MTCR could, over time, result in the proliferation of offensive ballistic missiles . . ." and expressed particular concern about the new MTCR members being permitted to retain space launch vehicle programs. Despite written administration assurances that Congress would be consulted on MTCR-related issues, to include the addition of new members, the conferees were disappointed to learn in the summer of 1995 that new countries would be admitted to the MTCR, despite retention of a SLV program and a history of evading program controls. The conferees believe that the current administration approach facilitates a growing and perhaps irreversible danger that the MTCR, despite its auspicious early history, will increasingly become an avenue for technology proliferation.

The conferees strongly encourage the administration to emphasize the use of controls on sensitive technologies in any new administration proposals to reauthorize the Export Administration Act, and that no attempts be made to repeal or substantially alter the missile sanction provisions in Title XVII of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1991, as was the case in the administration proposal submitted in the last Congress.
